Local News.

—Read Crane's new Christmas ad. this week.

—L. S See went to Cleveland Saturday, but is expected back to-night

—W. C. Bellinger, of the Bazaar, has a holiday ad. this week. Look it up.

—Wm. E. Stevens of the Beaver Island Lumber Co, was here this week, returning yesterday.

—Chas. B. Gale, of Calumet, is here to spend the holidays with Mr. and Mrs. H. Lee Iddings.

—F. G. Bellinger, jewler and optician, has a new ad. this week. First door north Hotel Bartlett.

—Ava Stoith and wife left Tuesday for Nevada, where they will spend the winter with their daughter.

—Capt. Frank Fountain, of the local life saving station, left Tuesday to visit friends in Sheboygan, Wis.

—Harrison Bedford, who is spending the winter in Boyson City, N. C., was here over Sunday, on matters of business.

—It is said that thirty eight Michigan weeklies have lately increased their subscription price from one dollar to one dollar and a half.

—J. Q. A. Turnbull, who has been traveling representative for the Chippewa Rustic Co., has resigned that position and left for the East Tuesday.

—Mrs. H. O. Smith, who will leave for her home in Owosso Monday, will be accompanied by her sister Florence Smith, who will remain in Owosso a month or more.

—Capt. Walsh, of the Soo, who now owns and operates the old Charlevoix tug Martin, is here, negotiating with Raber, the boiler maker for a new boiler for his tug.

—Capt. Wm. Finucan, having laid up the Missouri at Manistee, returned here Thursday night. After the holidays the Captain expects to visit his aged mother in Canada.

—We call attention to the new ad. of the Star Jewelry and Optical Co. this week. This means Fred. G. Bellinger, a Charlevoix boy born and bred, and well equipped in his line of work.

—Supt. Martindale, who is in Ann Arbor undergoing treatment for chronic stomach trouble, writes that he is encouraged by the prospects that have been held out to him by his physicians.

—The steamer Three Brothers left again Sunday morning, the 15th, with a cargo of Boyne City lumber for Chicago. This is the latest that this steamer has ever cleared from this port with a cargo.

—Merchants everywhere are interested in the litigation in Des Moines against one of the largest mail order houses in Chicago. The U. S. Grand Jury has indicted the firm on several counts, charging them with fraudulence of the mails. The matter is now up to the U. S. District Court for decision at some future date.

Madison, the confectioner, advertises Christmas candy in this issue.

Frank Berge went to St. James on the Beaver Monday, returning the same day.

—Orlowski & Son, the popular South terrace grocers, have an ad. on our fourth page.

—Mrs. F. E. Turrell went to Grand Rapids yesterday to spend the holidays with friends.

—Mrs. Myrtle Young went to St. James on the Beaver yesterday on insurance business.

—C. L. Gonser and wife, leave today for Ashley, Ind., to spend the holidays with relatives.

—Oscar J. Smith left today for Grand Rapids where he will spend the winter. His family preceded him there a month ago.

—M. Spencer, Keeper of the Beaver Head lighthouse, came over Saturday and proceeded to Nunica, Mich., where he will spend the winter.

—Mrs Jos. Clark., widow of the late Joseph Clark Sr., of Marion, is lying very low at her home. At this writing she is not expected to survive many hours.

—About the only lazy man in the city now is Elmer Johnson, in the bridge house. The only exercise he has lately is with his jaw swearing at Capt. Pete Campbell for not laying up like other folks.

—A party of Charlevoix Elks attended a Petoskey meeting Tuesday night. The bunch consisted of C. L. Gonser (candidate) Ralph Washburn, Miley Miller, E. A. Emrey, L. P. Adams, W. J. Gallagher and others.

—The Ladies Aid Society of the Baptist church will give a box social in the parlors of the church on Friday evening, Dec. 20th at 7:30 o'clock. Ladies are requested to bring lunch boxes. Everybody come and have a good time.

—We will send the SENTINEL and the New York Tribune Farmer for one year for $2.00 to any new subscriber, or to any paying one full year in advance. Or will send the SENTINEL and the American Farmer as above, one year, for $1.50.

—Notwithstanding the trials and tribulations of the High School Rustler staff the past ten days, that excellent school journal is out on its mid-month issue with as much vigor and vim as ever, and, we think, somewhat better than usual. Editorially, we consider it a credit to the editor and staff

—Mrs Fred. A. Smith, of this city, who went to Ann Arbor last week for treatment, underwent a very delicate and dangerous surgical operation Monday. She rallied well from the ordeal, and yesterdays telegraph advices stated that the patient was doing well and getting stronger fast. Her husband is with her.

—The SENTINEL job office is receiving an unusually large and fine assortment of stationery stock, both ruled and unruled, also a line of other stock for general job work. The SENTINEL job rooms is fully up to date in its equipment of type, presses, and other necessary appurtenances We respectfully solicit your orders, and we are sure we can please.

—A dispatch from San Francisco, dated Dec 4th, received at Duluth, says that the steamer Winnebago, which left Duluth Aug. 2d on her long trip around Cape Horn to the Pacific coast has reached her destination. For several seasons the Winnebago was engaged in the ore trade between Elk Rapids and Escanaba. The Winnebago also carried Boyne City ore a part of one season a few years ago.

—The re-organization of the Pere Marquette, its severance from the C., H. & C. and other foreign affiliations and its rescue from a receivership by stockholders who have faith in its future as an independent Michigan corporation will be hailed with great satisfaction by the public. The terms and plan of re organization appear to be both practical and meritorious, and calculated to advance the best interests of the property in every particular. Many cities and localities and thousands of shippers and patrons are vitally interested in the success of the new policy under which this company is to operate. They all believe that the management is henceforth to be surrounded by conditions which will make it possible for the road to advance and develop as it should naturally, without a single handicap They are of the opinion that a new era, brighter than any which has preceded in the history of this company, is about to commence.

—The "old reliable" pioneer jeweler Chas. R. Bellinger, has a special ad. in this issue.

—Pat Walsh, a well known pioneer of East Jordan, died at his home in that place Monday.

—The cost of maintaining the insane of Charlevoix at the Northern Michigan asylum for the quarter ending September 30, was $420 84, divided as follows: Board $376 80; clothing, $35 51; sundries, $6 53.

—Battle Creek Dispatch: Raising apples in Michigan is a business that pays and the "poor farmer" idea is a joke. This fact sticks out like a wart in the sessions of the Michigan State Horticultural Society. George Tucker, Fennville, modestly admits to selling 1,000 barrels of apples at $4 barrel, and even fails to deny that he has cleared $15,000 in five years on eight acres of orchard. Tucker has come to Battle Creek to hear speakers tell how to get more money out of his land.

Without any intention to indulge in bombast, we desire to remind the business men of Charlevoix that the SENTINEL is a good advertising medium 52 weeks in the year. It has the circulation that makes advertising valuable, and, what is more, we are not only willing but anxious to demonstrate the fact to any advertiser who desires to investigate. We are publishing two advertising mediums—the SENTINEL and the High School Hustler and have no time for "sports." The SENTINEL gives advertisers the worth of their money the year around.

—Traverse City Eagle: The barge Josephine Dresden which sunk a short time ago, on the shores of North Manitou island has been abandoned. It was not until after a diver, Sam Rose of Charlevoix, had worked hard and faithfully to raise her that this course was decided upon. The diver succeeded in saving the big gasoline engines which are worth about $1,800. The tanks which are loaded on the boat were also saved. The hull was loaded with dry lumber which was taken out of the hatchway this being a comparatively easy task as it floated readily. The loss to the boat will be about $2,000. Capt. St. Peter and John Newhall returned from the island today and stated that all activities had come to a close, and that only one man was left to spend a Robinson Crusoe existence there during the winter.

A Merry Christmas.

This is not a joyous Christmas for the SENTINEL. For thirty-six anniversaries of the birth of the Saviour of the world the day has been one of happiness to an unbroken family circle.

The thirty seventh comes to us with a break in that sacred circle, and a sorrow that transcends the ordinary tribulations of life as the mountains over top the valleys.

But, in our soul harrowing grief, We sincerely wish for all our friends the happiness that is typified in the glad tidings of great joy. "Unto Us a Child is born." May the day be one of joy to all.

MAYOR ESCAPES KNIFE.

Dr. R. B. Armstrong Fighting Hard With the Appendicitis Fiend.

Dr. Robert Bruce Armstrong, mayor of Charlevoix, has been a very sick man for several days, with an attack of appendicitis.

Sunday his condition was so serious that it was thought best to have an operation, and Dr. Darling, the eminent Ann Arbor surgeon, was called by long distance and arrived here Monday night.

On the arrival of Dr. Darling he went into council with the local physicians, and an examination of the patient developing the fact that inflammation was considerably reduced, it was decided to take him to Ann Arbor and operate there.

With that end in view, he was taken to the station Tuesday evening, but discovering that the train was an hour and a half late, he was taken back to his home considerably exhausted, and in no condition to repeat the effort that night.

Last night the Doctor's condition was less critical, and the physicians decided not to operate at present, as the inflamation was still less pronounced.

Later the mayor will go to Ann Arbor and have the appendix removed.

DAM BROKE.

The Recently Built Power Dam at East Jordan Washed Out.

The dam of the East Jordan Electric Light and Power Co. went out at 8 o'clock Monday morning, putting both the East Jordan & Southern and the Detroit & Charlevoix railways out of business. The loss is estimated at $75,000 exclusive of damage to the railroads.

The dam is located about half a mile south of the village limits and the power is furnished by Deer creek, a head of about 25 feet of water being maintained. About 8 o'clock Monday morning Peter Johnson, who is in charge of the power house was fishing on the ice on the millpond and noticed the water lowering rapidly. He quickly made his way to shore and escaped safely just as the big concrete structure went down stream. The cause of the accident is unknown.

The railroad bridge and about half a mile of the right-of-way of the East Jordan & Southern railway was washed out and how long it will be before this can be repaired is not known. The right-of-way of the D. & C. is washed out for perhaps 200 feet and is covered with logs, stumps and debris. Passengers and the mail were taken into the village by busses.

The town will not be in darkness as there is a steam plant maintained for emergencies. The Argo Milling company will probably have to shut down as they were dependant on the company for power and it is likely that the mills will also have to close as there is but a scant supply of logs and no more can be brought in until the railways are again in operation. The power plant was owned by the Loveday's of East Jordan.

Manitou County Orders.

There are two topics that can, when a famine of local news occurs, always furnish the material for a good story, —the S. S. S., and the Manitou County Order claims.

Yesterday the latter hobbed to the surface again when circuit court Commissioner Urquhart sat in solemn session at the court house Under the order of the circuit court, it became his duty at that time to receive the reports of the county treasurer and auditor general of delinquent taxes collected that were spread on old Manitou county rolls prior to 1895.

Under the order of the circuit court the commissioner will report to Judge Mayne at the next regular term, and then there will be another spasm.

Masonic Election.

At a regular communication of Charlevoix Lodge No. 282, F. & A. M., Tuesday night last the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

W. M.—W. H. Miller
S. W.—W. H. Collins
J. W.—W. E. Parmelee
Treas.—F. G. Hines
Sec'y.—F. A. Butler
S. D.—M. A. Levinson

PRESIDENT COTTER.

The Pere Marquette General Manager Promoted Under Re-Organization.

Wm. Cotter general manager of the Pere Marquette railroad, was elected president of the road at a meeting of the board of directors held in New York Friday evening. George W. Perkins, of J. P. Morgan & Co., was elected chairman of the board; Frederice B Stevens, general solicitor; J. E. Howard, secretary and treasurer, J. L. Cramer, comptroller. The last three named served in their respective places during the receivership of Judson Harmon.

Mr. Cotter's promotion is looked upon by railroad men as the right action. It makes the president the actual managing officer of the system.

Mr. Cotter is the thorough railroad man, born and raised by the side of and on the rails. His father was a section foreman in Bloomington, Ill., where the new pere Marquette president was born, and he and his three brothers have all risen to distinction in the railroad world. S. E. Cotter is general superintendent of the Wabash; Geo. F. Cotter is general superintendent of the Fort Worth & Denver City, and John J. Cotter is division superintendent of the Central of Georgia.

Wm. Cotter began railroad work as telegraph operator with the Chicago & Alton in 1874, and up to 1896 was train dispatcher or train master with the Iron Mountain, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and Wabash railroads. In 1896 Charles M. Hayes called him to Montreal as superintendent of the Grand Trunk, eastern division, and in 1899 Mr. Cotter first came to Detroit as Grand Trunk Western division superintendent. In 1901 he left Detroit to become general superintendent of the Iron Mountain and a year later was made manager of the Missouri Pacific.

When the Great Central Route was formed by the combination of the C. H. & D. and Pere Marquette Mr. Cotter was selected as general manager of the Pere Marquette. He came here Oct. 1, 1904, and began a building up management that he has since steadily continued. The throwing of the road into a receivership in December, 1905, did not disturb him, for he knew the cause was in the financial manipulation of the system and not operating failure. With such a receiver as Judson Harmon he was able to keep right at the upbuilding work, and the Pere Marquette is today a much improved road in every respect as a result of the Cotter management.

Mr. Cotter is a well built man, capable of much physical endurance, and of even, sure mental poise. During the three years of his Pere Marquette general managership he has done no public talking. He has been constantly on and over his road, in close touch with officers and men, thoroughly informed on every condition and forming and carrying out plans for improvement. All who know him believe he will make as good in the presidency as he has in every preceding position

It is believed that Mr. Cotter will continue to discharge the general managerial duties in connection with the presidency.

BEATTIE AND BEETS.

The Marion Farmer Tells What He Thinks About Raising Beets.

One of the best and most successful farmers in Northern Michigan is Arthur Beattie, of Marion. He writes the West Michigan Sugar Co. as follows:

"Enclosed find contract for fifteen acres of sugar beets. I have this amount of land that is in good shape for beets, and if we have a good season I have no doubt I can raise at least ten tons to the acre.

"My beet crop was the most profitable crop I raised this year, and, with the exception of last year, has always been the most profitable crop.

"I hope you will get a good acreage for next season's run I have talked with some of the farmers, and they say they intend to raise more beets."

KILLS TWO GRANDCHILDREN.

Bay State Woman Uses Gas, Then Drowns Victims in Bathtub.

Mrs. Emma Hunting walked into a police station in Somerville, Mass., the other day and announced that she had killed her two grandchildren. The bodies of the children, Raymond Shaw, 3 years old, and Pauline Hunting, 4 years old, were found shortly afterward at Mrs. Hunting's home. They had been stupefied by illuuminating gas and then drowned in a bathtub. The children were on a visit to their grandmother. They were left in her care while she went out for a short time, leaving them asleep. When she returned she found the gas jet lighted by her mother's side. I guess I'll go home to Rockland, she said to her father's brother, to find somebody to live with me." Mrs. Hunting is 45 years of age. In charge that the two boys were left alone for some time in April, Mrs. Hunting claimed that a neighbor had shot at her husband.

HOLD TOWN AT BAY.

Five Men Cow Populace at Carney, Ok., and Rob Bank.

"It was to be a robber with nerve. This was the sign nailed to a door on the Carney (Okla.) hotelery, by burglars, who held the whole town of 1 for a while their prisoners. The men, who had walked away with their loot, the proceeds of a robbery of the Carney bank, left the sign as a warning to the citizens not to attempt to remove it. When the bandits entered the town they ordered all persons they met to the hotelery. Women and children were driven out of their homes and compelled to join the men in the hotelery. Meanwhile the bandits had blockaded the doors of the building, arranging up a fusillade of fire on all directions. In a moment the town was aroused, and with the exception of the women and children, every man in the place was armed. Realizing that they had been caught in a trap, the bandits made the most of the situation. They ordered the women and children to stand in the line of fire, and the men, who had come to the rescue of their wives and sweethearts, were compelled to surrender. But the women and children, fearing that they would be killed, ordered the men to fire on the bandits. Then ensued a fusillade of bullets, the women and children ducking their heads and running for safety. When the bandits ordered the men to fire on the women and children, the men refused. Then the bandits, seeing that they had lost the game,

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

The Ascendancy of Taft.

The recent declaration of President Roosevelt—or rather his confirmation of a previous declaration, concerning a third term, has cleared the political atmosphere, eliminated from the presidential situation more than one "shoon," and greatly strengthened the candidature of Wm. H. Taft.

This reaffirmation of the president's position should not have been necessary—indeed was not necessary—for the people knew Theodore Roosevelt to be a man of his word, and it is gratifying to know that the declaration was given to the highest councils of the party rather than the indiscriminate elements of both parties that have, with diverse motives, kept the thirdterm talk alive. We have not believed that the renomination of president Roosevelt for a second elective term could be construed as a third term, but accept the president's recognition of his succession to the McKinley incumbency as a first term as effectually disposing of this technical construction.

And now the contest for the nomination may be said to be fairly opened, with secretary Taft against the field. Much could be said of the strength, or, rather, the lack of strength, of the various candidates of the "field," but it is unnecessary.

The administrative policies for which president Roosevelt stands are certain to dominate the convention at Chicago, and there is but one candidate for the nomination who can be safely trusted to carry forward the work so ably and fearlessly begun by him, and that is Wm. H. Taft. The president knows this, and we believe the people know it.

Learned in the law, a safe interpreter of the constitution, an able and fearless exponent of reform, possessing an intimate knowledge of the republic's best interests, as well as an intensely humane sympathy with their peoples, Wm. H. Taft is by far the strongest candidate now in the field.

Political and General.

The democratic national convention will be held at Denver July 7th.

The presidential aspirations of secretary Cortelyou—but that is only a joke.

Representative Sherwood of Ohio has introduced an elastic currency bill providing for the issuance and circulation of United States currency notes as legal tender.

The presidential campaign of William H. Taft will be formally opened at the Lincoln club banquet to be held in Grand Rapids February 14. This announcement was made by Taft managers in Washington. On that night Taft will make his first campaign speech and outline his policies.

The recently published bank reports make it plain that the recent "currency shortage" existed only in the fears of the bankers. There was more currency available for business purposes in business hands on the worst day of the panic than there was on the best business day of any recent year. It was fear that caused the trouble.

That the tariff will not be a live issue during the present session of Congress goes without saying, so Mr. Roosevelt and the leaders of the party are agreed that the best time for revising the tariff is immediately after a Presidential election, as at other times it is almost impossible to get men to treat the subject from the standpoint of the public good.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Work on the chemical plant and iron furnace at East Jordan has been suspended until spring.

A Washington dispatch states that Congressman Lend is working to get Petoskey made a port of entry. He has conferred with the treasury officials to secure support. The dispatch, which is signed by Mr. Harvey, at one time employed as reporter on the Daily Inter-lr, further states that the more is made efforts in the interest of the Petoskey manufacturers, which now have to unwind much red tape to secure rebate of leather exports made from imported hides.

Petoskey is thinking of getting a blood hound for one of the toys that has written the Ottaway Kennels, at Coopersville, for prices.

Petoskey Journal: We understand that Mr. J. U. Latchfield, who is in Buffalo, N. Y., has taken a position with a large lumbering concern who are operating heavily in Alabama.

Mrs. Isaac Stauffer, living a short distance east of Harbor Springs passed away Wednesday of last week, after a long illness. Her remains were taken to the south part of the state for burial.

The still house and storage department of the Cassinar, Diggins & Co. chemical plant at Cadillac was destroyed by fire one night last week. The loss will reach $7,000, with $2,000 insurance. The plant will be rebuilt at once.

John A. Jackson, the Traverse City fisherman who caught the last fish out of there about ten days ago, has other troubles. Friday he paid a fine and costs in the recorder's court at Traverse City, amounting to $110.75 for taking whitefish with nets during the closed season.

The case of Geo. W. Benham vs. the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan counties came up for hearing in the Grand Traverse circuit court on Tuesday. On motion, however, briefs are to be submitted to Judge Davis of Ionia.

Central Lake Torch: Word has been received of the death of Timothy Pearl at Silver Creek, Mississippi, Dec. 6th. He was a pioneer of Banks township, taking up a homestead in 1863 when this part of Michigan was an unbroken wilderness. He was a distant relation of the Pearls of Central Lake and Norwood.

The Hoyne City State Bank is to become a national bank. The new bank will be known as the First National Bank of Hoyne City. Permission from the authorities in Washington has been secured and as soon as the requisite legal action can be completed the new national bank will be open for business. The capital of the new bank will be $50,000.

Hoyne Citizen: The firm of Geo. M. Kerry & Son had a complete saw mill outfit in their custom planing mill on Vogel Street, and last week they sold the saw mill machinery to Wm. Grund, who is now busy moving the same to Walloon Lake, where he has built a small mill and is installing the machinery therein, and will cut lumber at Walloon Lake this winter.

The lack of snow is being felt keenly by lumbermen of Northern Michigan. The mills are being affected as well and unless snow comes very soon lumbering operations will be at a standstill. Many of the lumber camps are in full swing, but the logs can only be cut and decked. In some places the timber is being cut near enough to the railroad so that it can be skidded to the tracks and not wait for snow. Where the timber is back from the railroad and it is necessary for a sleigh to haul, the lumbermen are very anxious for the beautiful white. Most of the timber is back, so that near the railroad has about all been cut.

Boyne Journal: Labor conditions have not changed in Boyne City since last week except that the plant of the Rose Coppersage Co. closed down last Saturday night for their annual repairs. The W. H. White Company's mill at the Boyne City Lumber Company's mill, the Shingle mill, the Veneer mill, Van Platen's mill and the Coppersage plant are now idle. This means that many hundreds of men are out of employment. In addition hundreds of camp men are also laid off. When these institutions will resume operations is a matter for the future to determine. If it is soon Boyne City will weather the storm all right, but if it should be for some months it will mean a serious thing to the many men who are dependent on their labor for the support of their families. It is a matter of serious import to walk out of a good job at this season of the year and at this time.

Cheating the Wind.

The wind takes its revenge for the lack of fitting courtesy shown to it, in sheer wayward caprice its contemptuous gusts roughly a hundred real every trifled forth in the golfer's scientific author. To be able to cheat the wind by good stance, grip and swing to suit the conditions of the moment is without doubt one highest perfection of the golfer's art.—The Field.

Flowers as Party Emblems.

Flowers have their political significance in France. Years ago the followers of Gen. Boulanger adopted the red carnation as their emblem. One thousand that Mme. Mara, the famous songstress, was blessed off the stage one night in Paris in the restoration period because she wore a bouquet of violets. Violets are the Bonapartist flower.

Waste of Time.

We all complain of the shortness of time, and yet have much more than we know what to do with. Our lives are spent either in doing nothing at all or in doing nothing to the purpose, or in doing nothing that we ought to do; we are always complaining that our days are few, and acting as though there would be no end of them. —Seneca.

Willing to Be Decisive.

A little three-year-old, who is very precocious, was lying in her bed being put to sleep in the dark with her father sitting beside her waiting for her to get to sleep, when this one-sided conversation took place: "Hello, dada. No answer. "How do do, dada?" No answer. "Here you feel, dada?" Same answer. After a few moments' silence: "Glad to see you, dada."

As Seen by Him.

We live in a wonderfully age. We are wound up like automatons and we do the same things at the same time; never vary, never make the slightest departure from the conventional, and we think we enjoy ourselves. Perhaps if we could develop some departure from our routine we would be less migratory, and we would be able to conquer our horrible bugbear, Ennui.

Appeal to His Friends.

The following advertisement is clipped from a Halifaxian newspaper of recent date: "Wm. H. Logue, Jr., 931 North Broadway, hereby beg notify all to jury duty in the criminal court, earnestly requests the patronage of his friends and acquaintances."—Law Notes.

Whooping Cough at Ninety.

Whooping cough is generally regarded as an infantile disease, but in the Devonshire (Eng.) village of Ilfracombe, although no children are affected, quite a number of elderly villagers have been attacked in the almanac. The latest victim is over 90 years of age.

Rather than question of our duration is the question of our deserving. Immortality will come to such as are fit for it, and he who won't be a great soul in the future must be a great coward now.—Emerson.

The Ascendancy of Taft.

The recent declaration of President Roosevelt—or rather his confirmation of a previous declaration, concerning a third term, has clarified the political atmosphere, eliminated from the presidential situation more than one "bloom," and greatly strengthened the candidature of Wm. H. Taft.

This re-affirmation of the president's position should not have been necessary—indeed was not necessary—for the people know Theodore Roosevelt to be a man of his word, and it is gratifying to know that the declaration was given to the high councils of the party rather than the miller in the elements of both parties that have, with diverse motives, kept the third-term talk alive. We have not believed that the renomination of president Roosevelt for a second elective term could be construed as a third term, but accept the president's recognition of his succession to the McKinley incumbency as a first term as effectually disposing of this technical construction.

And now the contest for the nomination may be said to be fairly opened, with secretary Taft against the field. Much could be said of the strength, or, rather, the lack of strength, of the various candidates of the "field," but it is unnecessary.

The administrative policies for which president Roosevelt stands are certain to dominate the convention at Chicago, and there is but one candidate for the nomination who can be safely trusted to carry forward the work so ably and faithfully begun by him, and that is Wm. H. Taft. The president knows this, and we believe the people know it.

Learned in the law, a safe interpreter of the constitution, an able and fearless exponent of reform, possessing an intimate knowledge of the republic's insular interests, as well as an intensely humane sympathy with their peoples, Wm. H. Taft is by far the strongest candidate now in the field.

Political and General.

The democratic national convention will be held at Denver July 7th.

The presidential aspirations of secretary Cortelyou—but that is only a joke.

Representative Sherwood of Ohio has introduced an elastic currency bill providing for the issuance and circulation of United States currency notes as legal tender.

The presidential campaign of William H. Taft will be formally opened at the Lincoln club banquet to be held in Grand Rapids February 14. This announcement was made by Taft managers in Washington. On that night Taft will make his first campaign speech and outline his policies.

The recently published back reports make it plain that the recent "currency shortage" existed only in the fears of the bankers. There was more currency available for business purposes in business hands on the worst day of the panic than there was on the best business day of any recent year. It was fear that caused the trouble.

That the tariff will not be a live issue during the present session of Congress goes without saying, as Mr. Roosevelt and the leaders of the party are agreed that the best time for revising the tariff is immediately after a Republican election, as at other times it is almost impossible to get men to treat the subject from the standpoint of the public good.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Work on the chemical plant and iron furnace at East Jordan has been suspended until spring.

A Washington dispatch states that Congressman Lund is working to get Petoskey made a port of entry. He has conferred with the treasury officials to secure support. The dispatch, which is signed by Mr. Harvey, at one time employed as reporter on the Daily Resorter, further states that the move is made chiefly in the interest of the Petoskey ranchers, which now have to submit much red tape to secure rebates on leather exports made from imported hides.

Petoskey is thinking of getting a blood hound for use of the city and has written the Ottawa Kennels, at Coopersville, for prices.

Petoskey Record: We understand that Mr. L. M. Litchfield, who is in Buffalo, N. Y., has taken a position with a large hardwoodn concern who are operating heavily in Alabama.

Mrs. Inazo Stauffer, living a short distance east of Harbor Springs passed away Wednesday of last week, after a long illness. Her remains were taken to the south part of the state for burial.

The still house and storage department of the Cummer, Diggins & Co. chemical plant at Cadillac was destroyed by fire one night last week. The loss is about $70,000, with $30,000 insurance. The plant will be rebuilt at once.

John A. Jackson, the Traverse City fisherman who lost his boat by fire about ten days ago, has other troubles. Friday he paid a fine and costs in the December term of circuit court, amounting to $110.75 for taking whitefish with nets during the closed season.

The case of Geo. W. Benham vs. the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan counties came up for trying in the Grand Traverse circuit court on Tuesday. On motion, however, it was ordered to be submitted to Judge Davis of Ionia.

Central Lake Torch: Word has been received of the death of Timothy Pearl at Silver Creek, Mississippi, Dec. 6th. He was a pioneer of Banks township, taking up a homestead in 1853 when this part of Michigan was an unbroken wilderness. He was a distant relation of the Pearls of Central Lake and Norwood.

The Boyne City State Bank is to become a national bank. The new bank will be known as the First National Bank of Boyne City. Permission from the authorities in Washington has been secured and as soon as the requisite legal action can be completed the new national bank will be open for business. The capital of the new bank will be $50,000.

Boyne Citizen: The firm of Geo. M. Avery & son had a complete lath mill outfit in their custom planing mill on Vogel Street, and last week they sold the saw mill machinery to Wm. Grund, who is now busy moving the same to Walloon Lake, where he has built a small mill and is installing the machinery therein, and will cut lumber at Walloon Lake this winter.

The lack of snow is being felt keenly by lumbermen of Northern Michigan. The mills are being affected as well and unless snow comes very soon lumbering operations will be at a standstill. Many of the lumber camps are in full swing, but the logs can only be cut and decked. In some places the timber is being cut near enough to the railroad so that it can be skidded to the tracks and not wait for snow. Where the timber is back from the railroad and it is necessary for a sleigh to haul, the lumbermen are very anxious for the beautiful white. Most of the timber is back, as the near the railroad has about all been cut.

Boyne Journal: Labor conditions have not changed in Boyne City since last week except that the plant of the Elm Cooperage Co. closed down last Saturday night for their annual repairs. The W. H. White Company's mill, the Boyne City Lumber Company's mill, the Shingle mill, the Veneer mill, Von Platen's mill and the Cooperage plant are now idle. This means that many hundreds of men are out of employment. In addition hundreds of camp men are also laid off. When these institutions will resume operations is a matter for the future to determine. If it is soon Boyne City will weather the storm all right, but if it should be for some months it will mean a serious thing to the many men who are dependent on their labor for the support of their families. It is a matter of serious import to walk out of a good job at this season of the year and at this time.

Clearing the Wind.

The wind takes its revenge for the lack of gulling courtesy shown to it. Never wayward caprice its contemptuous gusts scantily a hundred and every trifled fault in the gulper's scientific armor. To be able to cheat the wind by gauging season, direction and force to suit the conditions of the moment is without doubt one high perfection of the golfer's art.—The Field.

Flowers as Party Emblems.

Flowers have their political significance in France. Years ago the following of Gen. Hoche adopted the red carnation as their emblem. Gossip records that Mme. Mars, the famous actress, was kissed off the stage one night in Paris in the restoration period because she wore a bunch of violets. Violets are the Bonapartist flower.

Where Wives are Cheap.

Along the Volga river wives are worth not $25 is said to sulbe almost anywhere to purchase one with. Probably she is dear at that.

Our lives are spent either in doing nothing at all, or in doing nothing to the purpose, or in doing nothing that we ought to do; we are always complaining that our days are few, and acting as though there would be no end of them.—Seneca.

The Black Death.

It has been calculated that the terrible plague known as the "black death," which began to ravage Europe about the year 1349, killed at least 100,000,000 of people in Europe and as many more in Asia and Africa. By some the bubonic plague is thought to be similar in nature to the "black death," but it has been demonstrated that such is the case.—New York Journal.

Chancery

State of Michigan, Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix.

Alice Porter, Complainant,

vs.

Herbert Porter, Defendant.

At a session of said court, held at the court house in the City of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 11th day of October, A. D. 1907.

Present, Hon. Frederick W. Mayne, Circuit Judge.

Now pending in the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix, is a certain cause in Chancery, at Charlevoix, wherein Alice Porter is complainant, and Herbert Porter, defendant.

It satisfactorily appearing to this court by affidavit on file, that the defendant, Herbert Porter, is concealed within this state to the complainant's solicitor, and cannot upon the exercise of reasonable diligence, be found within this state, and he is hereby ordered to appear, and answer the bill of complaint in said cause, within twenty days after the service of this order, or the complainant's solicitor, within twenty days after the service of this order, shall be entitled to a decree thereon, as confessed by said defendant.

And it is further ordered, that within twenty days after the date hereof, the complainant's solicitor cause a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed, published and circulated in said County, and in which the notices of mortgage sales, and other notices of chancery nature are usually published, and that such publication be continued therein, at least once in each week for six weeks in succession, or that she cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said defendant, Herbert Porter, at least twenty days before the time prescribed for his appearance.

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made by Rosina A. Barnes, and Sarah Jennette Barnes, of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Frederick W. Mayne, of the same place, bearing date the 1st day of July, 1905, and recorded on the 21st day of July, 1905, in Liber 50 of mortgages, on page 1, in the Charlevoix County Records, on which said mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice for principal and interest the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof; and whereas the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative by reason of such default; and no suit or proceeding having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the said power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the premises described in said mortgage, to wit: The south half of the southeast quarter of section 36, in Township 34 north, of Range 7 west, containing 80 acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey, in Charlevoix County, Michigan, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house in the City of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 14th day of December, A. D. 1907, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, to satisfy the said mortgage debt, with the legal costs of foreclosure, including an attorney fee of $25 in case no suit or proceeding has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, taxes, insurance, if any, and the expenses of the sale.

Dated September 12, 1907.

FREDERICK W. MAYNE, Mortgagee.

LISLE SHANAHAN, Attorney for Mortgagee, Business Address, Charlevoix, Michigan.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

To Cure Hams.

Take a gallon of water, one pound of salt, two ounces saltpeter, one pound brown sugar. Mix thoroughly and rub the hams therewith on every side. Then pack in a tight tub or barrel and place in a cool place for three weeks. Then put in a pickling tub or barrel and cover with brine of well-tested strength to float an egg. After remaining in this pickle about two weeks take them out, rub lightly with fine salt and hang them up in a well ventilated place to dry for two or three days, after which transfer them to the smokehouse, hang up about three or four inches apart and smoke carefully until they take on a nice brown shade.

Barn Itch.

A very common disease in winter is one known to farmers across among the cattle owners. By some it is called barn itch and by others it is known as Scrapiland. We call it rheumatism. Its cause is dry hay and cold stables in the air of the season.

Melt a teaspoonful of lard and add it with an equal amount of crude carbolic acid. Rub the affected parts well with the mixture. This is perhaps the most simple of all remedies. Another excellent remedy which has given relief is: Summer oil, camphor by weight, one ounce; oil of sassafras, one ounce; oil of cloves, one ounce; oil of wintergreen, one ounce. Shake the ingredients and wholesale it to destroy the spores contained in the crusts.—Dr. Roberts.

Worms in Horses.

Here is Veterinary Surgeon C. D. Smith's formula for worm powders: Mix together one pound each of ground red pepper and calomel. Give the powders in bran or oats, one half period of a dozen days or longer if they be not transmitted. As a close for colts half period for a month, and one period for grown. Give a hospital temperamental, or a feed of wheat bran, mixed with a little molasses and two years give a dessert, spoonful, and for yearlings a dessert, hospital, tablespoonful morning and night for a full month.—National Stockman.

Spavin in Horses.

For spavin in horses or colts take equal parts of tincture of opium, fluid extract of gipsum, tincture muriatic of iron and fluid extract of gentian. The grown horses give two tablespoonfuls to soft food twice each day. The yearling colts give half this amount, and soon as the ventilgas begin to lessen lengthen the time between doses and when the movement is firm enough to allow the grown horses to work give the yearling colts a little more. There is danger from shocking spavins suddenly.—Farmers Advocate.

Green Cut Bone.

The feeding of fowls would be expensive when compared with the production if equilibrium of foods was not given attention. If an ounce of bone and meat is given, it will equal one and one-half ounces of grain; hence in feeding the bone one ounce of green cut bone daily the still of grain must be reduced to one-half, so the green cut bone compensates for the grain and is much cheaper.—Western Poultry Journal.

Sores in Horses.

For sores in horses or colts mix equal parts of tincture of opium, fluid extract of gipsum, tincture muriatic of iron and fluid extract of gentian. The grown horses give two tablespoonfuls to soft food twice each day. The yearling colts give half this amount, and soon as the ventilgas begin to lessen lengthen the time between doses and when the movement is firm enough to allow the grown horses to work give the yearling colts a little more. There is danger from shocking spavins suddenly.—Farmers Advocate.

A Way They Have in the Army.

Sergeant—Attention squad for exercises, parade—Horrible! Sergeant—Thank you, sir, I will follow the instructions. Those who don't need will go through the sensible motions, as follows: Place thumbs left hand along seam of pantaloons, fingers straight and close together, palm to the front, chest out, head up, chin in, shoulders back, stomach in, right foot at right angle to left, weight on ball of right foot, knees straight but not rigid. Turn head to the right and front. Turn head to the front.—London Punch.

Can Be Learned Anywhere.

Truthfulness, humbleness, self-forgetfulness, faith, sympathy—these ingredients of a quiet and quiet spirit are learned at the fireside, in commonplace homes scattered over the country, or in city streets.—Henry Drummond.

Lions Ate Mail Matter.

A peculiar occurrence has taken place in Northwestern Rhodesia, when the mail bag containing the letters for the northeastern part of the country were destroyed by lions near Fetimane. The big animals ate the mail matter.

Electrocution.

Capital punishment by electricity was adopted in the state of New York from January 1, 1889. The execution of William Kemmler by electricity was effected, with some difficulty, in August, 1890, and was the first execution by that mode.

Advice to Airships.

It is not the airships proved to do so brilliant and original things once. You have got to repeat the performance until the people get used to it rather when such are no longer your lines, which is almost everybody or not being there at all.—London Dispatch.

A Hint to Wives.

When a man knows that there is absolutely nothing left on Friday that he wants to be hidden from his sons were he dead, he is the happiest man alive. If his wife is the only person in the world he will do anything to please her, then the apparently will die—Lippincott's Magazine.

The Smell of Burnt Food.

If anything burning over on the stove throw a little salt on it and the smoke will draw into the fire.—Sayers.

Has Turned Out Many Belts.

Has a belt been once made in church bells cast in Troy, N. Y., since the foundry was built there in 1852.

Tons of Gold.

Gold is so heavy that it is the most convenient form of wealth to carry. A ton of gold is worth $700,000, and a man can carry about $200,000 worth of it in his pocket.

Flowers at Birth and Death.

When a Frenchman dies his grave is all gay with flowers. When a Spaniard dies his grave is all gay with flowers. The sun and the atmosphere of France make flowers grow easily in Père-la-Chaise. The tears of the Worth Roulfly family is kept covered with fresh flowers at a cost of 20,000 francs a year.

Cobweb as Barometer.

A curious barometer is used by the natives of the Canadian Lake which indicates the weather by the state of its cobweb covering. The cobweb is used as a cap of the shell. The cobweb shell is where it is dry weather, but the slightest sign of a moist atmosphere is indicated by the appearance of small red spots, the indicator in the case of inclement weather, the shell becomes entirely red.

Foresight.

Superintendent (to new clerk)—Why, you want to put off comedy every time your performance was a different of a team. He knew how to make things. On the same day, the superintendent died, his grave struck on twins and he attended to a lunatic.—Transatlantic Tales.

The Things That Matter.

So long as a woman can be delighted at "charming" she is not entirely ruined by anything. Whatever her limits may be, they will be toward things that matter, and not, while even her virtues will be forgiven her.—The Ladies' Field.

"Echo Answers Who?"

When Jonas Hanway was hailed as the mother of one or two children has not been under service to the study. Hanway demanded double, who has a round dozen infants whose who cannot enjoy pity now?

Author's Funeral Pathetic.

Sterne's funeral was as futile as his death. Hunted, like poacher, he was the only one who followed the body to the grave, and he was buried in the parish burial ground of Marylebone.

Hearing Sound of Thunder.

Thunder can be heard at a place as 25 miles away and it may be absolutely inaudible at a place only 1 mile distant, this depending upon conditions of the air and upon intervening obstacles.

CHAPTER (Continued.)

Also for Ruth' he would not believe he heard aright when, during her final away for a moonlight walk, she begged for strength. Maddy's answer came, "I can not, Guy. I cannot. I acknowledge that I love which has made upon me. I know my duty to her, but I cannot do it. Ruth is my life! I have loved her from the first time I saw her. Forgive me, you will love her again. You must. Heal this Guy, then say if you are willing to be happy."

She placed Lena's letter in his hand, and Guy read it with a heart which seemed to its very core. It was cruel to deceive that gentle, trusting girl, written so lovingly of him, for to lose Maddy was to its unfledged heart's core, more dreadful still, and during the twilight walk he pleaded again, this time with the girl, and his fate in Maddy's power, for he had loved her from the first time he saw her, and changed in all since he left Aikenside, and Maddy, who had loved to him as a brother, pitied and more for him than ever before, and was willing to please her in any reasonable request. Maddy was Guy's heart's second love to him up and down turn over in his mind, and he could not, dare not, part with anyone.

"Maggie," he said, one day, "I know you that mine is as much as Maddy. I was too old to be her husband, and so made no very impassioned love to her, which she mistook for Margaret Alberstone. I have told her of you, Maggie, I would not marry her without, and she seems willing to take you as I have. Will you consider it, Maggie? Guy, who is the sure week of what he was when I last saw him, Maggie, I love Maddy, all about it, and though I doubtly consider her my sister, I believe that I think you still more sister. Before then we should suffer well forgiveness, Maggie, and we will forgive you. Lucy is a good girl, Maggie, and I love you more or less. I pity you sometimes."

"I am almost afraid Maddy, she is so pure, so innocent, so ignorant of the world, he was to marry another added to her misery. Maddy was to be his wife, and he was the citizen of the world. Then, too, sometimes for Margaret, he would have been better if she had not possessed the power to make him love her. He believed in her, and the shadowy wonder never ceased to be a bitter a cry of pain to him with which she had first thrilled him the ground, and for a time, on the night of the moonlight night.

There was Guy's letter yet to read, and while a few minutes longer she curled in starting as there thought, a perfect Heaven of Guy, who sent it, he said, because he wished her to be the first to know of his marriage, and would make him happier to know he could sometimes look at him, just as he should come upon her mirror after it was a fine to see the original. And there was all the finer reference he made to the good, earnest character of Lucy, telling how happy she was, and how if anything was needed to make him his fate, it was the knowing how pure and good and loving was the wife he was getting. Then he wrote of the doctor and Margaret, whom he described as a fashion, but not yet the veriest tease and madcap in the world, and the sister opposite of Maddy.

This letter, so calm, so powerful in its tone, had a quieting effect on Maddy, who read it twice, and then placing it in her bosom, started for the cottage, meeting on the way Ruth Hope, who was moving for her to great alarm. Poor Lucy Joseph had fallen ill, and had fallen upon the floor, cutting its forehead badly against the sharp point of the stove. Therefore Mrs. Maddy found that other Elses had already been at the cottage, including the physician, who came at once, but shook his head doubtfully as he examined his patient. There were all the symptoms of fever to be well, nothing Maddy prepare for the worst. Nothing in the form of trouble could particularly annoy Maddy now, and perhaps it was wisely ordered that Uncle Joseph's illness should take her thoughts from herself. From the very first he refused to take his medicines from anyone save or at the hands of Maddy, refusing to take Aunt Agnes or Sarah, or even Mrs. Hope, who, in her kindness, was a great comfort to Maddy.

As the fever ran its course, and Uncle Joseph grew more and more delirious, he spoke for Sarah, were heart-rending, making Josie weep bitterly as she said to Maddy.

"If I know where this Sarah was I'd go miles on foot to fetch her and bring her to him."

Something like this Josie said to her mother when she was left for a day to Aikenside, asking her in consolation if she could find Sarah.

"Perhaps," and Agnes brightled at the thought, "perhaps I can find her. I ground her poorest lodging, and then I will go to the sort cute fair Sarah Hopkins."

"Where do you suppose she is?" was Josie's next question, for Agnes knew she did not answer, except to Maddy, who was her pet, and who was just her idolizer.

"Why, that morning Agnes' eyes were very red, as if she had been wakeful the night before, and Josie, who was her pet, wondered how the handsome girl had contracted the habit of sleeping.

"Josie," she said, as they sat together at their breakfast, "I am going to see Sarah, and I want you to see Maddy, and shall leave you here."

Agnes was not the same woman when she first knew Jill Hope of the Cottage Beautiful. Her heart had been made grow older the mother nature was strong, and she had grown, and there had been and making her far more gentle and cautious. Her mother's death had been a loss. To Maddy she was passionately kind, and was sure, if any one could find Sarah, it was the Hopes, whispering "This is like Sarah's—psyche Sarah, are you not?"

"Yes, I am Sarah," she would answer, then she would be careful to see would again break over his face as he told how long he had wished her, and asked if she had not come to stay till he died.

"Hush!" somebody would say, and he would then ask the name of Lucy Joseph, and Agnes would tell him, and then he would "Lucy Joseph! Lucy Joseph! Lucy Joseph! Lucy Joseph!" Agnes replied, the sick man was the wife he was getting. Then he wrote of the doctor and Margaret, whom he described as a fashion, but not yet the veriest tease and madcap in the world, and the sister opposite of Maddy.

This letter, so calm, so powerful in its tone, had a quieting effect on Maddy, who read it twice, and then placing it in her

THE Popular Pulpit

PROSPERITY OF THE WICKED.

By Henry A. Cope.

"For I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked."—Ps. lxxiii. 3.

Asaph seems have lost a lot of sleep worrying over the prosperity of the wicked and some sinners have made a community from adversity. It has a strange to the same that the Omnipotent, who loves sin, should allow so much of the good things of this world to fall into the hands of the unworthy; if they had a chance they would say, "tell us, they would be much better—honest."

If it be true, "all there are many bad men who have plenty of money, lands, and other good things," is true that many are many intelligent men and women who have none even. Sometimes we wonder why God, that is true that the smiling, chimerous voice of every one is ready to answer that it may seem strange, but it is well to be the evil one because he is some measure of success.

The saints are not all poor; the sinners are not all rich. Success does not tell us the character or the worth. The moral order of the universe is not based on success, but on the precise and equitable division of duties. The inflexible law of righteousness and the prosperity of the sin not simply indicates the tendency of an action, and success in sin is many misunderstood.

Why is the prosperous man? There is a great deal of difference between being personally prosperous and being the instrument of prosperity to others. A poor blind beggar may be rich in himself while he is a blessed one! Prosperity is not a proof of goodness, but it may be rich in himself while he is a blessed one! Prosperity is not a proof of goodness, but it may be rich in himself while he is a poor farm or at a poor job.

Prosperity must be measured by the person and not by the circumstances. To answer the question, "How much is a man worth?" By getting fifteen and twenty dollars a day, we have found that many a man said to be worth millions is actually not worth his room in bible society, is not in his own character adding one mite to the world's wealth. Prosperity is not in the real self, worth is in your life prosperous; in your heart prosperous; in your mind prosperous; in your hands prosperous; in your feet prosperous; in your eyes prosperous. He who is the best to do, but fails, deserves the same praise or blame as though he had done what he intended to do. Success of the promised land, but he, if, as his attempt at it was, he deserves the same as worthy as though he had gotten. Beautiful Arnold did not succeed in getting to Rome, but the consummation of the set ... his own soul.

DRUDGERY A PLEASURE.

Men Who Won Fame by Putting Their Heart in Their Work.

Some may think that constant work will make a man a drudge, without any pleasure in the world at all. So it would if the man did not trade himself of his own aptitude and a love for the work, which, all can do, and then the drudgery is transformed into a pleasure. In the end we all may be divided into two classes, the drudges and the lovers of the lilies and the workers—the drudges or the workers "get there," the drudges or the idlers are left behind in the race.

Constant dropping wears away the rock, and constant drudgery will even accomplish wonders. Slow as it may be, it will be great work in time if it could only be begun. If you get tired at one thing take up some thing else equally as useful. Some may get relaxation from one labor by taking up another. Try as long as continued of your work that you won't get tired; try to fall in love with your work and it will be a great success.

John Adams became tired of his Latin and wrote to his father to excuse him from them. "Certainly, my son," the father replied, "you may dig some ditches—the long inside ditching. Digging ditches produces no of reflection, that, that night that John Adams had obtained permission to resume his Latin in the morning. He was one of the pillars of the Revolution, and the successor of Washington as President.

Cyrus Field entered A. T. Stewart's dry goods store as a boy. Mr. Stewart he said he was there before the port ears came in the morning and did all the work of a boy, and was in the evening. Then he spent every evening in the store, and was there on Saturday night delivering goods. He was rewarded for the diligence by being made a partner, the worthy of institution A. T. Stewart owed his success to Cyrus Field. Mr. Cyrus W. Field walked four miles every day to Philadelphia from his home in Lancaster, saving three bottles Marcellus quick, a day, in the month is walkin' for it."

"What do the runners do when you happen to have the goods?"

"Sometimes they have to square the bull by purchasing and taking the goods in the public emporium; sometimes they make some excuse about being short of change or asking him or their way home."—New York Tribune.

The Other Captain.

Captain (withheringly to private)—My friend, you ought to be acting boy. Are there any more like you in your family? Private—I have only one brother, sir. Captain—Oh! And what is he? Private—Captain, sir—Sun Vi-Yaud.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

Walking with God.

O, Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me the secret; help me bear
The strain of toil, the fever of care.

Help me the slow of heart to move
By some clear shining word of love;
Teach me the wayward feet to stay
Where the flock is the loneliest way.

Teach me thy patience! still with thee
In closer, dearer company,
In work that keeps faith fresh and strong,
In trust that triumphs over wrong.

In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way;
In peace that only thou canst give,
With thee, O Master, let me live.

Some time ma truly a traitor as through the bad succeeded. What goes before doing is more important for the first time what comes after.

There is more virtue in some men's hesitating than in others' doing. No not be ever creator, or sanailar, than the motive behind it. The Lord Jesus "sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury" and the rich cast in much. Yet it was true that the smiling, chimerous voice of every one is ready to answer that it may seem strange, but it is well to be the evil one because he is some measure of success.

The saints are not all poor; the sinners are not all rich. Success does not tell us the character or the worth. LESSON FOR DEC. 15.

The Boy Samuel.—1 Sam. 3:1-21. Golden Text.—Speak, Lord; for Thy servant hearth.—1 Samuel 3:9.

All through the centuries of the Judges the laggards were growing into a benumbed nation. While wandering in the wilderness and while fighting for possession of the land they were for ever in danger of being lost from their property, and yet they were undoubtedly proof, while at the same time Heaven is clearly at harmless as ever.

Unlike most abominations, the devil upon their strength of color of harmful-and-be-spoon qualities, to attract a coveted reputation. Horace in Nero's reputation, "Long early to obtain and easy to apply, a very solution in but water being all the ingredients necessary and requiring no any good." Drunkenness is a most abominable household poisoning.

In addition to the distinctive qualities, Horace in accepting a household necessity, and can be used for setting water, cleaning and whitening clothes and for the skin, whitening dishes, makes an excellent cement and paper and is used for the finest laces or most delicate fabrics without injuring the texture of the cloth it removes every odor of perspiration and leaves the skin soft and velvety.

Graphic Account of Stirring Scenes Discovered on the Battlefield and in Camp—Veterans of the Rebellion Recite Experiences.

Perhaps the most amusing incidents of the Civil War, the Spanish-American and Boer Wars, and the Boxer Rebellion, are those which are not generally known, and which are not published in the newspapers. Such incidents are the spice of the history of the wars, and are the salt of the stories of the soldiers.

CONTAGION A QUESTION OF PREVENTION.

Sinks, drains, soiling and emptying utensils, sick rooms them and etching frequently carry the dreaded disease germs manufactured by the household. Thousands and hygienic cleansing is the best and most economical disinfectant, and such a safeguard is found in the universal household necessity, Borax.

This simple preventive carries in itself, distinctive qualities which center in the fabric or not when the article to be cleansed is a hygienic manner, simultaneously exerting antiseptic property, rendering it sanitary and proof, while at the same time Borax is of itself an harmless as salt.

Mr. Mason pulled the edge of the umbrella with white the interest to the salesman, "Is this a good one?" the salesman's answer was the commendation of its good points.

"This is $10, isn't it?" he asked.

"Oh, no," replied the salesman reproachfully, "it is $18."

"She seems to regard the 11 cents as particularly unfortunate. I wonder why?"

Mr. Mason to his wife.

"Not at all," said the lady, "it is only a matter of nothing 'lucklessness' about it."

"Yes, I suppose so," said Mr. Mason, "it is $18."

Good in Potatoes.

There is a tradition that potatoes are good for gout and also old age. It is certain, at least, that Lord Palmerston, who was a gouty subject, lived to 81 and ate potatoes at every meal, in some measure, too, the elder people live very largely on potatoes and thrive to a good old age thereon.

Why Borrow Trouble?

As you and everyone else enjoy a good dinner without thought of the poor cooking of the morrow, why can we not take the joys of the present with cost, and not embitter them with borrowed troubles of a possible future.—Exchange.

Zoo Pleases Chinese Emperor.

The emperor of China's Zoo is giving him great satisfaction. When the animals arrived at Pekin they were carried to their new home in coaches. It is stated that even the elephant was carried in that way.

Child in Hard Luck.

Because a fortune teller said that little son would one day be a great poet, the parents of a merry born child at Trenton, N. J., have christened him Longfellow Milton Tennyson Burns Shakespeare Bloomer.

Wooden Leg Was his Purse.

A man who was knocked down by a runaway cab in Essex road, Islington, London, has the stump of his wooden leg broken, and a large number of silver and copper coins dropped out of it.

The Passion of Laziness.

It is indeed this passion of laziness, which is responsible for half the crimes in our daily history.—Olive Christian Malvery in "The Best Market."

Royal Road to Beauty.

Beauty, cultivated, of course, by keeping in health, cultivating a smile and scattering pleasure. You may become content, lovely and sparkling by pursuing the correct road to beauty.

Colors and Vegetation.

Red glass hastens vegetation, while blue glass retards it. Pineapples grown under the red glass grow 15 times higher under red glass than under blue.

Floor Finish.

It is very hard to get the average finisher of floors to dispense with fuller-dirt and varnish, but if you want your wood to keep its good condition for a long time.

—The West Michigan Sugar Company is congratulating themselves on the way in which the acreage contracts for 1908 start out. The contract season opened one day last week with 100 acres, and they came voluntarily, from those who increased their acreage over last year's contracts. Enough is already known of the sentiment among farmers to indicate a good, healthy condition among the farmers on the beet question, and the factory people are looking for a very successful campaign for acreage.

—Exchange: A subscriber for a newspaper once received a dun through the postoffice, and it made him cool. He went to see the editor about it, and the editor showed him a few dunns of his own—one for paper, one for pipe, one for fuel and several others. "Now," said the editor, "I didn't get mad when these came because I knew that all I had to do was to ask several reliable gentlemen like you to come and help me out, and then I could settle all of them." When the subscriber saw how it was he refunded gold up, and renewed for another year.

—Beginning with December first the payment of sparrow bounties became operative again. By the new law the birds must be presented entire to the clerk of township or city where they are killed and after counting them the clerk must burn the bodies. The clerk is required to hang the heads if they are not in good condition finally killed to quantities of not less than ten. The bounty will only be paid during the months of December, January and February. This correction of the sparrow bounties is for the protection of other birds.

In some of the northern Michigan papers, and in two state dailies the information is given to the public that the Charlevoix county court house is totally destroyed, and that the devil is to pay in devious ways To show how badly the court house is "destroyed," there are two desks and two attorneys tables that were in the court room, on the second floor, through the fire, that are unimpaired, except by debris falling upon them. Varnish will make them as good as new. The same with the chairs in the jury box. Please don't exaggerate this matter. The court house is not destroyed. The roof is gone, and there is some damage from water and debris. If work could be begun at once, the building could be entirely restored in two weeks. CONTINUED TROUBLE.

The S. S. S. Passing Through a Crisis, by Reason of Local Jealousy.

As we predicted in a previous issue a sort of semi-climax was reached in the matter of S. S. S. Interests at a meeting last Sunday afternoon at the headquarters of the Society.

Very much to the discomfiture of the Beaver capitals, the master of the Mission was present, with an added prestige, by reason of his recent appointment to the Manitou.

Pete filed to chief Duncan around the premises as he would a Beaver Island fish cart, and ran into the same proposition that Neil Gallagher did when he tried to run the "Beaver" off the route with the "Joe."

The meeting was fast and furious, and only for the luck of dumbness on the part of Capts. Geo. Weaver and Eph. Small, Capt. Pete would have been mowed under on the spot. But, Capt. Eph. of the N. M. liner sterling, considered it his duty to stand by the commander of the line, and the election of officers was deferred for two weeks.

The founder ventured to introduce a resolution that

STOLEN CHILD IS RESTORED.

Kidnaped Girl Back at Home with Her Parents.

When Sylvestal Bishop Wolff was returned to her home well and intact after a most remarkable adventure attended with the dreaded crime of kidnaping, the crowding streets of the city in mid-afternoon, and from the midst of a group of citizens the little girl had been led away by a woman whose tips delayed the hearing of months of promises made to children fancy, placed in a wagon which was driving around the corner from the child's home and drive away to become the center of a man and woman in their wanderings about the country. The child was found a prisoner in the traveling cages of the man and woman who were in camp near Manassas. In Her Kidnapers. The startling discoveries in William and Alice Jones were forced to confess the child over to Joseph Shield Hiles by and were taken prisoners. The child and her parents were taken in custody

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

A Veteran Pedestrian.

Age seems to sit lightly on the shoulders of Edward Payson Weston, and thus apparently has no effect on his marvelous powers of physical endurance. At the age of sixty-nine the famous pedestrian has proved that he is not yet a spent walker by any be wsy and incidentally that the open air life has in abundance is the true cure or for of youthful strength.

Weston is undoubtedly the greatest pedestrian that ever walked and has a great venue some years ago. His latest walk to Chicago from Portland, Me., was a duplicate of a feat of forty years ago. From the early sixtys to the late eighties he walked almost continuously in public exhibitions and in his day made a lot of money. In 1877 he made a match with Dan O'Leary, then regarded as the greatest of pedestrians, for a bet given by Sir John Astley. Nearing the end of his life day race he was carried miles behind O'Leary and he passed up eleven miles on also, which he was induced to leave the track. Afterward it was learned that O'Leary was ready to give up the race but Weston kept on at the time. They finished O'Leary 520 miles, Weston 510 at the end of 142 hours. Two years later he walked 2,000 miles in a thousand hours and in the same year won the Astley belt from Edward Brown, making 550 miles in 144 hours, 56 minutes. In 1881 he walked again against O'Leary in a match and drew the latter from the track.

EDWARD PAYSON WESTON.

Two of a Kind.

Miss Hilda Ringdal, the young Swedish actress, whose remarkable parentage of Ibsen and Björnsberg roles has brought her international reputation was recently the center of a party of women in a little restaurant on the east side. During the course of the dinner stories were round, and Miss Ringdal told some incidents of her apparently slip upon the stage at Stockholm under the personal direction of that great actor, August Lindberg.

Lindberg was an angry person and a strict disciplinarian. One day a young actor who had already been the victim of several reprimands and reviews weddings came in very late. He was assigned, disbraided and showed plainly that he had been drinking. In a very disguised manner Lindberg, who had been watching for him, approached and said in impressive tones, "Go—er—lem on a drunk again."

"No sire I," responded the young actor quickly.—Bohemian.

Congressman Carter of Oklahoma.

The substitute of Oklahoma to the sisterhood of states adds five representatives and two senators to the rolls of congress. Four of the new representatives and both of the senators are Democrats, but this fact does not change the political complexion of Uncle Sam's big legislature, both branches still remaining strongly Republican. The house of representatives in the Sixtieth congress comprises 301 members, of whom are Republicans, giving a majority of 75 on a party vote, in the senate the disparity is even greater, the Republican contingent numbering fifty two to nine.

Much interest attaches to the delegation from the new state and particularly to Charles Carter of Ardmore, formerly in the Indian Territory. Mr. Carter is a quarter chickasaw Indian and also has some Cherokee blood. He is a prosperous farmer and stockman.

CHARLES CARTER.

Strangled Attacking Wildcat.

Frank Sanders, living near Shamokin, Pa., when attacked by a wild cat, stunned it with his dinner pail and then choked the animal's throat, slowly strangling it to death.

Stick to Old Custom.

In many parts kitchen the kettle still is hung on a crane above the open fire, not for artistic reasons, but because the housewife never has tried any other way.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Frying Hints.

Don't put croquettes in hard until a blue smoke rises from it to show it is absolutely boiling. You lose a temperature means greasy, indigestible fritting.

Don't attempt to fry anything until the fat is hot enough to give out a blue haze. If it burns a shop golden brown at once you are safe in beginning.

Don't forget to clarify and strain your fat after it has been used once. Only a waste if you throw away the material after it has done duty but once.

Don't forget to have heavy brown paper in a cabinet on top of the range, and put your fried things into it as soon as done. The paper absorbs any superfluous grease.

Cleaning Windows.

For cleaning windows some people use ammonia in the proportion of one tablespoonful to a gallon of water, but the warm can be performed quite as efficiently and much more quickly by using clear water and two good clean rags, another one for washing the glass and the other for polishing it. See that the wash leathers are quite clean, and be careful to change them so that the water drips from it. Have plenty of clean water and change it frequently. Dip the chamois in this and rub the panes, taking care that the corners are not forgotten. Wipe the cloth tightly and go over the surface of the glass a second time. Then polish with the other wash leather.

Emergency Relief.

When a child is seized with convulsions, that most dreaded of infantile diseases, carry it immediately into the open air and the convulsions will soon cease. If the weather be cold be sure to keep the body well covered and give the air free access to head and face.

Croup, which so often attacks children in winter, is caused, nine times out of ten, by the lack of air in the house. Open the windows and admit plenty of fresh air, and you will find the breathing relieved and in most cases the services of a physician not needed.

Clothesline Holder.

A simple, but satisfactory remedy, clothesline holder, which is a decided improvement on the common hook usually attached to the house to support the clothesline, is shown herewith. With the ordinary hook the rope must be tied to prevent slipping when the clothes are on the line, the knotted rope is a catch and drawn the latter from the track.

THE ROPE CANNOT SLIP.

The thicker the knot is laid in the holder. The latter is in two sections, pivoted to the bracket in a crib, which serves as the hook for the rope. The latter is caught in the hook and the end inserted in the opening between the hook and the bracket. Naturally the greater the pull on the rope the more firmly will the hook be forced against the bracket, preventing the rope from slipping out of position.

To Remove Tea Stains.

If you find boiling water poured through the stain does not remove it, add salts of lemon or oxalic acid, or baking soda—either one will answer the purpose—say two or two and a half tablespoonfuls of each dissolved in about three quarts of boiling water. Dip the stain into this solution and then wash in the usual way, using cold water. You will find that this will remove a stain of long standing or one that has been set by being washed in ammonia. If you have wrapped an article and had the stamens fade and run, the above solution will remove all traces of it.

Glazed Potatoes.

Select medium sized sweet potatoes, boil until done, take cold and peel and remove the skin. Have an egg beaten with a dash of salt and pepper, cut the potatoes in half lengthwise, dip in the egg, dust with granulated sugar, arrange in a generously buttered pan, put in oven and bake until brown. Serve hot.

Tea and Coffee Pots.

Never wash tea or coffee pots with water in which there is soap. When they become badly discolored fill with cold water in which is dissolved a tablespoonful of pearlash (potash), and heat slowly until the water boils. Rinse thoroughly with hot water and dry. Always dry on the back of range.

Ammonia For Silver.

A teaspoonful of household ammonia to warm water will clean silver thoroughly and make it very brilliant. If the silver is cleaned use a small article. Rinse in hot water and dry with a linen towel. Ammonia is also excellent for polishing glassware.

Peculiar Chinese Currency.

Each province in China, also each city and many smaller towns, have a different sort of value, as the last is expressed to be an ounce of silver, but there is an uncertainty as to how many grains constitute this ounce, and the fineness of the silver also varies at each point.

Speak Gently.

A gentle voice reached to the depths of the heart and a harsh one acts as the whip of chastisement which is forgotten in haste.

FOR THE CHILDREN

The Garden Gate.

This is a pretty game for children. A ring is formed of all the players except one, who stands in the middle. The others dance around her. Once or twice they sing the following lines to sing:

"Open wide the garden gate, the garden gate, the garden gate, Open wide the garden gate and we pass through."

The circle then dances round her again, singing:

"Get the keys of the garden gate, garden gate, garden gate, Get the keys of the garden gate, open and close it yourself through."

The girl inside the circle, pretending to find the keys, says:

"I've lost the key of the garden gate, the garden gate, the garden gate and cannot let myself through."

But the dancers dance round and round her, singing:

"You may stay all night within the gate, within the gate,
You may stay all night within the gate, unless you've money to pass through."

The girl then rushes to the weakest pair of the ring and tries to break through them. If she succeeds she stands upon the clasped hands of the children and generally contrives to break through, the one whose hand gives way becoming captive in her stead.

Snow Sport.

A delightful game to play in the winter holidays, when the long hours drag within doors is snow fort and sports, says the Washington Star.

A very slight snowfall will suffice for the game, but it may be played with snow a foot deep in a city back yard or in the field of the country. The game is prepared by the boys, who first, with light boots, trample the snow in long clear, wide, with six or eight diametric paths as the size of the lot may allow. After these paths are clearly marked the fun begins. Any number may join in the sport. It is like the old story of "The Spider and the Fly." One person stands in the middle of the circle and dashes up and down the diametric paths to solicit upon the players as they fly across the circle. The players can venture into the center if they are so willing, but if they do they become the spider and dash for another victim. The one who is catched cannot walk around the circumference, but is confined to the central paths.

Insect and Net.

It is well known for a long time that an insect will not go through a net with meshes three or four times as large as its body, whereas a bird will go through a net, of corresponding size without hesitation. The insect cannot tell us why it stops and lights on the net without trying to go through, and its peculiar action puzzled observers until the scientists took the matter up, as they do all things of that kind. They say that the eye of the insect is made up of many facets, so that the net looks to it like a continuous opaque surface, the meshes not being apparent. Therefore it sees no terra lack before it discovers that it might have gone through the net without stopping. To the eye of the bird, however, the meshes are plainly visible, and it goes through without hesitation.

Riddles and Answers.

On yonder hill there is a mill, and in that mill there is a wheel, and now it goes and now stands still. Tongue in mouth's head.

It goes up the hill and down the hill, yet it never moves, but stands quite still. A road.

It opens like a barn door;
It shuts like a trap.
You may graze all day
But you can't graze that. (A comet.)

What is that which every one can divide, yet no one can see where it was divided? Water.

He Can Do Little Who Can't Do This.

One of the players takes a stick in his left hand and thumps the floor with it, saying, "He can do little who can't do this." Then he hands the stick to another player, who will probably use his right hand when holding the stick and thumping the ground. If he does he is held to have failed in the slight test, and the stick is passed to another. The game goes on until some one discovers that the secret of success is to carry the tender exactly, and therefore the stick must be held in the left hand.

Puzzles Answered.

When is a straight fold not a straight fold? When it is a rye fold.

Which is the most important tree in Idaho? The date.

Why is Troy weight like a dishonest person? Because it has no scruples.

Why is a tailor-boy like a brick-layer? He raises stories.

What is an old maid in the middle of a river like? Like to be drowned.

MRS. MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Rosamond on the Hillside," "Lena Rivers," "Maid-of-Orleans," "Tempest and Sunshine," "Cousin Maude," etc.

"It was wicked in her to fetch you here," she said to Maddy, who now in Lucy's place was found her sitting upon the floor with her head leaned upon the window sill, and her face wet with trifling thing, and didn't know exactly if you, poor child, poor Maddy!" and Mrs. Nash laid her hand kindly on Maddy's hair. "Maybe you'd better go home," she continued, as Maddy made no reply.

"No, Mrs. Nash," said Maddy's voice was strangely unnatural as she lifted up her face, revealing it her so haggard and white that Mrs. Nash was frightened, and asked in much alarm if she should have her physician.

"No, nothing," she was going to say that "I rather think a little longer where there are signs and wonds of life. I should like to be alone for a few minutes, so that I do you know that to-morrow will be the bridal?"

Yes, Mrs. Nash knew it; for she hoped it might have escaped Maddy's mind.

"Poor child," she said again, "poor child, I reckon you did wrong to bring her in."

"Oh, Mrs. Nash, don't tell me that! don't make it harder for me to bear. The Tempter has been telling me so all day, and my heart is so hard and cold I cannot pray as I would. Do you think God can forgive me, I am?" and Maddy lost her face in the broad, motherly lap, sobbing as a child would, for she was greatly perplexed how to act, or what to do.

Years ago, she would have scorned the thought of marrying Mr. Ashe, the man who had hissed in his own presence, and by the time she was twenty, she would be married to him, and would have had her way, bringing her boy home, never giving him a thought, Mrs. Nash could not know her way. Her mind was so clouded that it was difficult to recall the wretched Maddy, saying to herself, "I'll tell you what I'm ashamed on to-morrow, when I'm in my right mind."

"Why, Maddy, what is bothered you so, that you don't know what you are about? Why, child, I'm your mother, and I'm sure I can't see why I shouldn't be interfered with, and why I shouldn't do what I think best for you. Now, Maddy, I'm your mother, and when the doctor comes down to the breakfast table, I shall tell him I've decided that you shall be married to Mr. Ashe, and that I shall have no nonsense about it, and that you must be married in the morning, and that you must stay, as it is, I cannot see them to-day. Charlie will drive me into town in the hack to-day, and I'll see to my dress! And how is Lucy?"

"Oh, I forgot to tell you about her. Poor daughter," and Mrs. Nash handed to Maddy the telegram received that morning, and which was merely as follows:

"The accident to have should be at station at five o'clock to-day.

"ROY REMINGTON."

Twice Maddy read it over, surprised, though much the same feeling she would have experienced had it been her death warrant she was reading.

"At five o'clock! I must go before that," she said, sighing as she remembered how, one year ago that day, she was traversing over the very route where Guy was now traveling with his bride. Did he think of it? Think of his long rambling at the depot, and the subsequent ride, the events of which grew more and more sickly that he memory, making her cheek burn even now, as she recalled his many note of kindness?

Laying the telegram on the table, she went into her room, taking her dress and bonnet and sandal ready for the bride, the same dress in Lucy's which the bridal dress and the bright fire blazing in the grate made exceedingly inviting to her chilled frame. Dress and Maddy endured the prelude of preparing for this from which Agnes had almost stripped the consecration.

Ever and anon, during a most tasteful toilet, which she placed upon a chair by the side of the bridal dress, a piece of paper which she folded across the top, would attract her attention, and she would say, "Poor Ashe will recognize my handwriting; can't help it, poor fellow! I'm sorry, too, as with one long, flat look at the boxes, she would turn to the table, and, after laying the table for dinner now, and with a kind of fierce energy, she would commit the screams for pulse to and fro, bringing her either, in honor of the bride. Comparatively, it was the quiet dinner, the bridal dinner, joyful yet, as first sat down with Guy at that table. Then which the proud bridegroom have banished her, but it would to her age, as she looked back, that she had come to her place there. There was a place for her there, a place only she could not sit in. She could not stay; and she knew as they were going to their dinner she would be alone in her room, or in some other place. She was not devoted to meet Mrs. Hendricks, and she felt that at the first time she should recognized a name which the newspaper had given her, and which jarred on her every time she heard it. She was not prepared to meet Mrs. Hendricks in English lady. Then of course would be Lucy's place, and she could not be alone, to grief for her own miseries, for Lucy was sick, and Lucy's home was desolated, and Lucy's heart was broken, and Maddy followed Charlie to the depot, and, as time was hidden him drive on, as time was very indecisive of a certain, Charlie, the gray, hoary afternoon was drawing to a close, and the Hendricks were waiting down stairs for the Hendricks in sleepy mien, when the entrance was marked, and Maddy, pale as the dead, silently walk, entered the cold, dreary room, and, without a word, but a fear in her heart

That Mar Knowles.

Keep your eye on that young man L. F. Knowles, of Boyne City, now sitting as a delegate in the constitutional convention—watch him!

Even this early in the game Knowles is beginning to show up through the misty atmosphere that seems to have settled down over the con. con.

Leonard F. Knowles reminds us strikingly of the late lamented Judge Cornell, except, perhaps in the one negative quality quite conspicuous in the judge's character—frigidity.

Knowles has the same element of cold self possession, the same cool gray eye, and the current is innate on and the circuit established, and then you can read him as you would a book.

Knowles has a big chunk of brain tissue in his cranium. Personally he is no exponent of his own recognized that bad politics or bad law practice have no place in his legal or political code of ethics. The one thing that impresses itself upon the minds of those who get close to him is a manifest reserve force—an asset which, in a public career is a paid up insurance policy, drawing good interest, and compounding itself.

Keep your eye on Knowles! He won't fade in the wash. Neither will he shrink to a satisfy. Knowles will never require a bigger hat than he wears today down at the con. con. He is not built that way.

Knowles will never display any political "To Let" sign on his office front, neither will he employ bloodhounds in chasing down political honors.

Northern Michigan has future use for L. F. Knowles. Keep your eye on him.

Letter From Billy Gagnon.

CLEARY, ALASKA, Nov. 21, 1907.

TYLER BROTHERS.

I noticed you will find a clipping of the Fairbanks News, giving an account of the fire which nearly swept our thriving little town out of existence.

I have been located in Cleary for the past two years, and am doing nicely.

This country is certainly the land of golden opportunities for a young man to get a start in life. He can and will undoubtedly accomplish more in one year here than on the outside, I dare say, in five years. Of course, we must grind continually, and must contend himself with the rough from the life.

The climate is more or less similar to that of Michigan, with the exception of the extreme cold of the winter, which is sometimes as low as 70 degrees below zero. During such cold snaps we Alaskans do not venture out of doors more than is absolutely necessary. The average winter weather is about 20 degrees below zero.

Cleary is a town of about 2,000 inhabitants, and is situated 7 miles from Fairbanks, in the heart of the Tanlanna valley, on the famous stream known as Cleary creek, the richest producing creek in this section, having produced over $6,000,000 in gold this past season.

The favorite pastime during the winter months is "dog sledding." Everyone who can afford it has a dog team, and is as proud of his individual team as one would be of a nice team of driving horses, on the outside.

Many would-be dreary days in the winter are spent in the hills hunting moose, caribou, grouse and ptarmigan, by those who can manage to break away from their business for a few days vacation now and then. Many trappers make big money trapping martin, beaver and mink.

This is the quiet time of the year as there is very little setting done from the freeze up until after the Christmas, when the mine operators again begin to take out winter dump for spring sluicing, which begins about the 15th of April.

Common wages in the mines are $5 per day and board, while engineers, hoist men and point men get from $5 to $10 per day. Board is quite an item in this country, it costs $45 a month being $1 each.

Provisions of all kinds are shipped in during the summer months while the Yukon river is open, which is from about the 15th of June to the 15th of September. Enough supplies and provisions must be brought in during these months to last until the following summer, as it's almost impossible to bring in much over the trail.

Well, Mr. SENTINEL, whenever I can conveniently get around to it again, I'll write you another page about Alaska. Thanks for the interest to your readers.

With kindest regards to you and other friends, I remain as ever

Yours,
WM. C. GAGNON.

Charlevoix Boy Burned Out in Alaska.

Old Charlevoix residents will remember Will Gagnon, a bright, ambitious boy who left here for the West several years ago.

In another column we publish a communication from him, and herewith publish a clipping from a Cleary paper concerning him:

—William C. Gagnon, the druggist and postmaster, suffered a loss of $800 on his property formerly occupied by the Cleary restaurant people. The threatening flames gave Billy the moving spirit and all his friends were there to help him. So anxious were they to help him that they stepped all over themselves and countless little bottles of dope and boxes of powder were crushed and scattered all over the place, making it resemble a scientific drug experimental station. The mail was given first attention by Gagnon. It was all taken in in good shape. A few days will be required to replace the private boxes and partitions. The large glass front was torn out of the building, and everything in general dismantled in the excitement. Mr. Gagnon's loss will not exceed $500.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

At the recent meeting of the Lake Michigan Fishermen at Ludington, W. E. Campbell was appointed official organizer for the association. They also officially designated the Great Lakes Submarine the official organ of the association.

C. L. Lorraine, editor of the East Jordan Enterprise has invested a voting machine which is to be tested by the township of South Arm and if found to be all right they will purchase some of them and a factory will be established in that city.

All the mills at Boyne City started work last week Monday, the difference having been settled satisfactorily. This is very fortunate, as already the strikers had begun to feel the effects, and just at this season the loss of wages would be doubly hard.

The Emmet county agricultural society wants the board of supervisors to buy the fair grounds at Petoskey and donate the same to society. Kalkaska parties will build a lumberman's float factory at Newberry. They have a contract to furnish 20,000,000 a year for five years.

Representative of the Island City Pickling Co. were in our city last week looking for a location for a salting station. We understand that they want the village to furnish a site and erect a building 35 ft. by 100ft., and also to secure contracts for 150 acres of cucumbers. As to their just what they will agree to do.

KING OF THROAT AND LUNG REMEDIES

DR. KING'S NEW DISCOVERY FOR COUGHS AND COLDS CURES ALL THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES

SAVED HER SON'S LIFE

My son Rex was taken down a year ago with lung trouble. We doctored some months without improvement. Then I began giving Dr. King's New Discovery, and I soon noticed a change for the better. I kept this treatment up for a few weeks and now my son is perfectly well and works every day. MRS. SAMP. RIPPEE, Ava, Mo.

In the early 80's the census gave us an Indian population of 900 or 400 families. Today there are not more than 40 or 50 families. Some have died but most of them have moved away. The drift has been further north, up into Canada, and westward. In summer the Indians pick berries for a living, that is the women and children do, while the men fish and some of them work in the mills. In the winter the men work in the lumber camps. Some of the Indians have prospered but as a rule they are thriftless lot. The reduction in the Indian population makes no difference however in Petoskey's annual crop of Indian business and road work for the summer months. The crop is still equal to all demands and no doubt will continue to be so even when the last Indian is gone."

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER I.

"The approach to the offices of Girdlestone & Co. was very signified one. A narrow doorway opens into a large chamber lighted by two side slits of this is a brass plate with the inscription, "Girdlestone & Co., African merchants," and above it a cuckoo lettergoldpe suspend to a gibbet. Following the guidance of this cuckoo, one ascends the dark and dirty flight of a small square yard surrounded by dingy, grimy warehouses, and finds oneself in a large, white and airy room, with a sanded floor and a fire burning in it, and two clerks at high desks, with a sense of young men at their backs, and a sense of hurry and business in the air. Any latitude of a London office will have defined from a London office will have defined from the Mediterranean. Great grew and prospered, until Harston began to look upon as a worse man in the City circles. His only child was Kate, a girl of his own character, and of good family relations, save Dr. Dimmock, a prosperous Wimpole Street physician.

Girdlestone pushed open the iron gate and strode down the room with a nod to his friends house. A bright sunshine streamed in through the dusty windows upon the green lawn and the marigold flower beds in the golden light. The sun, and the birds, all spoke of life. It was hard to think that death was lurking in the grim house to which he was bound. A plump little gentleman in black sat just downstairs.

"Well, doctor," the merchant asked, "what's the latest news?"

"You're not come with the intention of hearing it, I'm sure," said the doctor, glancing up with some curiosity at the tall figure and overburdened shoulders of the merchant. "It is a most virulent case of typhoid. I'm afraid it will be hard work to save her life, but I shall do my best, and you can be happy on my death."

"Mine is a good woman, and popular on the coasts. He may indeed be sorry, but we all have our failings. Here is the vouched for by our agent. 'Sila Jones' dead latitude of palm.'"

"Will it down to-day," the other interrupted.

"It will rise before the Black Eagle arrives." the merchant, with a sigh. "Well, Hi. "Then he has calm nerves, gain, sheep, whose, whose, whose." Then he is as a fancy figure. We are sorry to need of a man of his stamp." "We have been very slack of late. It is not the work, however, always the same." "Yes, however, Girdlestone continued "It has been a great loss to private affairs, the business of business to private affairs, however pressing." "Well, I hope it will be to be doing, and he has sent a message to her saying that he wishes to see her." It is inconsiderate for me to leave the office just now, but I feel that it is my Christian duty to do so. Good morning, I wish you, therefore, to look after things until I return."

"I am hardly believe that Lady Kate grac." Harston said, "Well, 'Tom' must be some mistake. Why, I spoke to her on Whence lost Monday." "He is very sudden." his father exclaimed, taking his hat and leaving the room. "There is no doubt about the fact, however, the hope that he will survive until evening. It is a case of malignant typhoid fever."

"You are very old friends." Kate ventured, hoping that the subject of her father.

"I have known him since we were boys together." the other replied. "Yes, my dear, Kate." "Yes." "Yes." "Yes

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Dry and Falling Hair.

Shampoos take all the natural oil out if too frequent; then comes the dry, burning sensation of the scalp, the hair looms lifeless, and there is no luster in natural gloss. An oil of some sort is absolutely essential for this, and leaf mercury makes an excellent preparation. So does the application of castor oil, once crankshaved the best of all oils for the hair. Olive oil or sweet almond oil, just a few drops of either, well massaged into the dry scalp every night and morning promotes the secretion of its natural oil and then may be omitted. A little salt in a half cupful of cold water is good. The hair should be wetted at intervals all over the head and the solution applied with a small soft brush to the scalp. It is healing and stimulates a new growth. When brushing the hair the stiffy should not hang the scalp, but reach every part.

Camphor Cold Cream.

To make camphor ice put a quarter of a dram each of white wax and paraffin, melt in a china bowl over hot water to melt; before it gets too cold add a grain and a quarter oil of peppermint, two and a quarter oil of rosemary and one ounce of expressed oil of sweet almonds; stir well, lift from the heat and stir in seven-eighths of a dram of camphor, and then add an ounce of rose-water, beating well; a silver fork. If the liquids are poured into the melted fats very slowly and the beating continued, they will mix and amalgamate thoroughly without any trouble.

Soda's Various Uses.

There are many valuable uses for soda. Dampen soda and apply it to a bite or sting of an insect. Flowers will keep fresh longer if a pinch of soda is put in the water. A weak solution of soda will revive the color in a dingy carpet. A large teaspoonful of soda will bleach a bottle of white cotton cloth. It is also good for the sink if dissolved in boiling water. When using soda water and clear well in order to sweeten them. A teaspoonful of soda added to the water in which silver is washed will help to brighten it.

Attachment For Pitchers.

A unique invention recently patented is herewith shown. It is a drip attachment for pitchers. This drip cup is designed to provide a simple means of preventing the contents of pitchers and similar vessels having a discharge spout trickling on the table or on whatever object they happen to be placed. The drip cup is secured to the receptacle beneath the spout. Its use will be apparent, the dripping from the spout of the receptacle dropping into the drip cup. It is impossible for the contents of the drip cup to drop out when the pitcher is tilted. For this purpose a guard is placed partly across the top.

Peas Pudding.

Put a pint and a half of peas to soak overnight. In the morning the peas begin to swell and plunge in boiling water. Boil for two and a half hours, when they will be tender. Then take up, mash them in a bowl, adding a good piece of butter and pepper and salt. Mix all thoroughly, then tie them again in a floured cloth and boil for another hour. Turn the pudding out on to a platter. It cannot then look a golden ball. It is nice with boiled beef, but particularly good with pork.

Mock Cherry Pie.

A cupful of vinegar cut to halves lengthwise and the seeds washed out, half a cupful of seeded raisins chopped fine, a tablespoonful of flour mixed in a cupful of sugar. Mix together and pour on half a cupful of boiling water and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Be sure to use vanilla. Bake in two crusts.

Kettle Needed But Once.

When the bottle threatens to boil over grease the rim lightly with a bit of butter. The contents will come as high as this danger line, but they will come no higher. Saucepans in which vegetables and other things are cooking may be treated in this manner, as can also the coffee pot.

Maître d'Hotel Butter.

One-half cup of butter, one tablespoon of lemon juice, one-fourth level teaspoon of salt, one-fifth level teaspoon of pepper, one level tablespoon of finely chopped parsley.

Cream the butter and add the lemon juice very slowly, then the other ingredients.

Hints on White Goods.

Though many remedies are given for removing ink from white goods, but iodine is said to be effective. Dip the stains in very hot, even boiling, melted iodine. Let it cool on the material and then wash as usual.

Kings in Exile.

In the Philadelphia directory for 1856 is the following entry: "Dorlons Messrs. Merchants, near 100 North Fourth street." Jack was Louis Philippe, afterward King of France, and two of his brothers, who lived at the northwest corner of Fourth and Princess streets.

Golden Age to Come.

Oh, ancestors have you read the time, when the golden age is indeed in Sierra Leone.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Uncle Sam's Fleet Superior to Any.

In his annual report to the secretary of the navy Rear Admiral W. L. Rodgers, chief of the bureau of construction and repair, takes occasion to answer the criticism that from time to time have appeared in various publications alleging deficits in Uncle Sam's fighting vessels.

Chief Constructor Hanus says that the present battleship fleet of the United States navy is fully equal in all respects to that of any equal number of vessels in any other navy designed during the same period.

He further quotes one of the most distinguished foreign authorities on the subject as follows:

"The extraordinary high figures for United States ships affords food for thought, not both in ships with high powered guns or impervious to vital injury at long range, the United States fleet is superior to any in the world."

When Rear Admiral Rapp was appointed head of the bureau of construction in 1901 he was forty-three years of age, the youngest officer ever having the rank of rear admiral in our navy. As his senior naval officer Rear Admiral Capps was born in and appointed from Virginia. He entered the Naval academy in 1866 and graduated in 1869 in his class, for 19 years an ensign. And for 15 years ten of each class were then retained in the service. After a year of two years' service he entered the construction corps, where he was advanced from the bottom to the top.

Mistaken Identity.

Representative Murdock of Kansas, who would be called "red headed" by Augustus O. Stanley of Kentucky, is a "dead ringer" for Ed E. Johns, the Washington correspondent of several western newspapers. Their friends are constantly getting them mixed.

The other day Mr. Murdock was leaving the president's office at the White House. A breathless correspondent, every ambition to the profession of the Washington writers, rushed up to him.

"Got anything from the president?" gasped the scribe.

"No," replied Mr. Murdock, with some petuliousness. "I didn't come here to get anything from the president."

"Look here, Ed," replied the correspondent, with warmth, "you don't need to get cheeky with me."

And then our Murdock, who calls a country newspaper in western Kansas "humbled" "city friend" told he. "Do you mistaken me for that red headed newspaper man who is always crossing my trail. I don't write news—I make it."

Kentucky's New Governor.

Among the surprises of November's balloting was the action of the voters of Kentucky, who decided that a Republican shall sit in the gubernatorial chair. Augustus Everett Willson, who was chosen to fill that exalted station, was the recent Republican nominee and has at his life been identified with that party. The last Republican to act as governor was William S. Taylor, who was removed from office by the legislature in 1900 and has since been an exile from his state.

The new governor of the Blue Grass state is sixty-one years of age and is a lawyer. He graduated from Harvard in 1869, later taking the law course at that institution. He was for several years an unsuccessful Republican candidate from the Fifth Kentucky district.

Society Conversation.

"Do you believe in the higher psychology?" asked Mrs. Oldcastle.

"I don't know, ma'," replied her bonnie as she grappled with her diamond studded fan, "I can't say as I do, although I don't see why some men wear those so low that they get all frazzled around the ladies."

Tip to Linen Buyers.

In buying cotton cloth, accurate to get a piece that is not too thick. It is a very age to wear into holes at these places.

The SPORTING WORLD

Tremblay Now Max Champion.

The new lightweight wrestling champion of the United States and Canada is Eugene Tremblay, who finally succeeded in defeating George Hodgner of New York after Hodgner had been carried through the breaking of his leg in two falls by Ernest Kish in Buffalo.

Tremblay's managerial shears are also now after George Bennett, under the well known promoter of sports, of Montreal.

Many Americans have never seen the Canadian in action, and Manager Kennedy intends arranging matches with the best lightweights claiming the winter.

EUGENE TREMBLAY.

Tremblay excels both in offense and defense. He is one of the strongest wrestlers of the weight ever developed outside of Japan.

"Alex Ran."

Most people who are at all familiar with newspapers have noticed, under the nameos of the first three horses in a race, the line, "Alex ran." Then follow the names of unsuccessful animals.

In this connection an amusing little story is told. On hearing the result of a certain race a somewhat shaky firm of bookmakers having offices in a large city decided that it would be wise to seek fresh words and fresh pastures new.

Next morning an expectant and eager crowd of shouting "clients" assembled the entire and surrounded the office door, to find a notice affixed thereon. It read pretty nearly as follows:

D——— STAKES
1. Dynamite.
2. Bosser.
3. The Duke.

Also ran—Hodge & Hurry, Turf Commission Agents.

Probably the firm is still running, and a good many clients would like to know in which direction.

Chicago Ice Yachtsmen Organize.

Chicago ice yachtsmen organized at the Sherman House recently and organized the Ice Yacht Club of Chicago. The following officers were elected: Commodore, Lester Wehmann; vice commodore, George Bezne; secretary and treasurer, Bell. Capt. Wehmann, Charles Swan may be in the plan of the new association to hold numerous races during the winter, and a schedule has been arranged for the regatta committee. It was reported at the meeting that many new boats are being built, which will increase the size of the already large fleet now on the lake.

Jockey Would Be Priest.

"Father Bill" Daly, for twenty-five years a noted figure on the eastern turf, now hopes to live long enough to begin his vocation. Michael, a jockey celebrate mass. The boy has been riding for the Fairbanks stable for two years, but dislikes the life and feels a vocation for the priesthood.

"Go ahead, my boy, and I will see you through," said Daly.

The boy is twenty years old and hopes to enter a seminary soon to begin his ecclesiastical studies.

Skating Squabble Over.

The fear that the National Skating and Amateur Athletic unions have settled their difference is viewed with general satisfaction. The interests of both will be served best by such a course and the public spared the petty details of another squabble such as that of last winter. The plan adopted for the affiliation—that each organization govern its own affairs, but recognize the "rings" of the other—is the right idea and should prevent the recurrence of any trouble.

Cobb's Great Record.

It will take Tyrus Cobb, the speedy central fielder of the Detroit American's, a long time to recover from the shock he received recently when the official batting averages of the players of the American and National leagues were issued and compared. He was shown to head the list of all the competitors, even including Hans Wagner, the Pittsburg National pill pounder.

Cobb on his return to his home in Georgia recently was given a banquet, became by almost every man, woman and child in his county.

Cupid and Cupidity.

A Missouri man says doctors that cupidity among the members of that state greatly embarrasses public celebrations. In a recent one the chairman introduced, emcee, and pink-blushed, pretty school girl, dainty and sweet, crowned queen of the Grand City. Texas that is playing haves here.—Houston Post.

A Big Advantage.

The man who is always on time has a big advantage in the struggle for success.

Baby's Idol.

In a certain part of China there is not a little idol shaped like a child. Whenever a baby is suffering from indigestion, or some other ailment, the mother climbs up the hill to the hut where the idol is kept, rubs the idol and wraps over it for her baby's recovery. So many heads have rubbed this little image that the outside is now quite smooth.

RIDING THE SOUTH SEA SURF.

Author's Description Makes One Long to Participate.

"I shall never forget the first big wave I caught out there in the deep water. I saw it coming, turned my back on it and paddled for dear life, then kicked and foiled my heels out, until it seemed my arms would drop off. What was happening behind me I could not tell. One cannot look behind and paddle the windmill stroke. I heard the roar of the wave hissing and churning, and then my board was lifted and flung forward. I scarcely knew what happened' the first brief minute. Though I kept my eyes open, I could not see anything, for I was buried in the rushing white of the crest. But I did see wind. I was entirely conscious of ecstatic bliss at having caught the wave. At the end of the half minute, however, I began to see things and to breathe. I saw that three feet of the nose of my board was clear out of water and rifled on the wave. I felt my weight forward and sends the nose down down. Then, I lay, quite at rest in the midst of the wild movement, and watched the shore and the bathers on the beach grow distinct. I didn't cover quite a quarter of a mile on that wave, because, to prevent the board from bite, I shifted my weight back, but shifted it too far, and fell down the rear slope of the wave."—Jack London in the Women's Home Companion.

Long-Winded Preachers.

The seventeenth century ministers preachers talked for two hours or more, are by the clock, but be not heardsmen. At least one of them turned the close to humorous account. He finished himself so farther than the middle of the sermon when the taunts had run out. He turned to the text, the subject, and, reversing the horology, "Let's have another glass," said he.

Sir Roger L'Estrange tells of a parish clerk who was patiently "all the preaching was three-quarters through his second glass, and the gallery of the church was empty, the sexton fast asleep in a convenient pasture, he accosted the minister as soon as he came out of the church door when he had done, "and pray the key under it, as he had the few that remained were about to retire."

Eyelashes and Eyebrows.

These do much beauty in long, silky, curved eyelashes. Men are proud of "beetling brows" fringed with dark lashes. They fondly believe that such features indicate force of character backed up by immense brain energy. In Circassia, Persia and parts of India one of a modern conflict cares is to promote the growth of long children's eyelashes by tipping and removing the tiny, gossamer-like points with a pair of scissors when the youngsters are asleep. By repeating this every month or six weeks the lashes become long, fine, fine, curved and silky. This practice is said to be very useful in treating inflammation of the eyes, or granulated lids. Shaving will make the eyebrows thick and heavy.

No Wonder.

They were talking about the children in the building and how they played in the halls and what mischief they were. "My boy isn't like that," remarked the fat dweller in the front apartment. "He never makes any trouble. He never plays in the halls. Presently her boy came in. He was 14 only, but he was six feet and one inch tall.—N. Y. Press.

Encourage Use of Antimony.

Half the Indian and French governments are encouraging the use of antimony pigments, which have the advantage over white lead of being impervious and over zinc paint of being proof against sun and sun proof. Antimony is also yielding a wide application in the manufacture of bearing metal and other alloys.

A SHADOW.

Hiram Adams lived in a humble cottage in Jerusalem. One evening he stood some before the open window thinking. Three different times as per at coming of the air was cool, the city air. Below in the narrow, hilly street was a summer twilight, coming fast and over the back of the sun where little heads clustered and stopped on the way, seeing stones. He was a melancholy song in the customary plaintive, drawling, nasal tones of the canyons, and as he passed along the sound of his voice reminded one of the toggle, on the window sill by a lizard. Hiram's dissertation, and an clear and brilliant was the February moonlight that Hiram could read the fine writing without difficulty. It was a definite of the established order of things of standard composition character of his composition. And as he stood there in the city where the lion of human development was born and had gone forth over the earth he planned some the purpose of the document he is to himself: "Oh, my! we young people are natural fine in conversation. We are the ones who now to all ages have broken ground. For the truth which have exceeded from the city. As he spoke he made an unconscious gesture with his hand. At the same time his obvious felt upon his own shadow on the wall outlined by the moon. He could not restrain his laughter. Was not that the shadow of an orator, the hand thrown back, the hand extended as if he were declaiming some stirring passage?

A feeling of shame swept over him as he recalled his words. He was a boy, he was the man transmitted from that city to the wonders revealed to the inter appreciated the daughter of a southern lightsaber called out to the small interpreter from that world: "The girl with the red dress on is the prettiest of the girl with the red dress on is a cowgirl." Again and again the harmless clothing was hurled at the unfortunate wallflower, until what finally, with one accord, every self-satisfied, relaxed, the very cool, then, the girl, who is supposed to be a lady. It seemed to a cowgirl that is about, leaves the president is fond of cowboys and cowgirls, but not even a secretary likes a shrew!

LOST SOUTH SEAS CONTINENT.

Australian Professor Seeks Solution of Ancient Mystery.

The lost continent of the South seas is a pet study of Dr. Washington Gladden, of Ohio, who has lately in the way of recovering valuable information with an original press area was that double of 2,000 fathoms recovered between the islands. It was necessary to look for land evidence of continents by boasting to account for the submarine depths. The granite area in Viti Levu was found to be from 12 to 20 square miles in extent, underlying the modern volcanic rocks. A range of granite mountains with precipitous cliffs on each side gave evidence of heavy faults creating chasms of great depth. The floors of the rivers forming a marked contrast to the network, an upwelled coral for 200 feet above the sea level, conglomerate rock abounding as shells at heights of 800 feet above the sea, and certain shells and tufts which had probably been submarine and were now at a height of 4,000 feet. All these indicated a tremendous uplift sufficient to cause greater flooding in the original continent. The trees of Fiji were of comparatively youthful development, and even at present passing through the canoe cycle.

REPARTEE OF THE JUVENILES.

Washington Children in Smart Exchange of Compliments.

Evidently there was a severance of friendly relations between two of a group of equal girls who a short time had been complete about the swaid in Dupont Circle, for just as a southern lightsaber called out to the small interpreter from that world: "The girl with the red dress on is the prettiest of the girl with the red dress on is a cowgirl." Again and again the harmless clothing was hurled at the unfortunate wallflower, until what finally, with one accord, every self-satisfied, relaxed, the very cool, then, the girl, who is supposed to be a lady. He Knew How.

"How," asked the young man who had just bought the village newspaper and decided to win prominence as an editor, "can I get the public to become interested in my journal? I know the practical thing is to make a good paper, but if nobody takes it how will anyone find out that it is good? Some day must be made to attract attention to cause the people to understand that we have a good paper." "I do not say," said the traveling editor, who had stopped overnight and was telling the annual on the new "dead point" in film saying that a certain reasonable thickness will give a lasting effect, "that your suggestion is not a very important number of his field and some other. I'll bet the paper contains the first thing you do is to get up a sensational story." "Well," said the young man, "I'll tell the people that I'm going to do it." "Yes," said the traveling editor, "and that will stopped overnight

TWAIN AS AN "EAST MARK"

Admits it Himself When Food Concern Costs Him $37,000.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed in New York against the Plasmon company of America, manufacturers of food products, at 59 Pearl street, of which Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) is ostensibly president and vice president. Those per officials of the company—William H. McIntosh, who claims $2,400 for salary as president to April 29, 1906; William T. Hobson wants $1,000 for salary as secretary and treasurer, and Ralph W. Ashcroft, who alleges $850 salary is due him as general manager, secretary and treasurer, and for money lent—have filed the suit. It is alleged the company is insolvent and that on Dec. 6 admitted in writing its inability to pay its debts. The company was incorporated in April, 1905. Its capital was started at $100,000. There has been a counter for a long time past between the American and English stockholders of the company. These disagreements resulted in bankruptcy proceedings against the company on Feb. 16, 1906, which were dismissed on Jan. 10, 1906. Mark Twain has been active president and vice president since April, 1905, as a "humanitarian" for the clerical interests. Mark Twain's home his secretary said the number was only temporarily in possession of the company. Mr. Clemens was asked if it was true, as reported by some of his friends, that he had been swindled. "If it" said Mr. Clemens, "one of how people" "I shed tears." "I shed tears." "I shed tears." "I shed tears." "I shed tears." "I shed tears."

DENIES MURDER OF FAMILY.

Missouri Man Charged with Whole-sale Crime Blames Brother.

Albert Ferrier, who is in jail charged with killing his wife, daughter and baby, and publicly hinting at a lynching if he should be released from custody, Tuesday, has made a statement in which he charges his brother, Henry Ferrier, with killing his brother's wife, with killing Mrs. Albert Ferrier and her baby, and with a number of other crimes, which he was absent from the state. For a month past his brother has been living with his wife and daughter. When he returned home, he said, his brother attacked him with a club, and he shot his brother in self-defense. Albert gave no evidence of insanity. The officers do not believe his story.

WOMAN JURY DECIDES FOR MAN.

Female Panel in Colorado Gives Verdict in Dressmaking Case.

For the first time in which woman suffrage was in effect in Colorado a woman was the plaintiff in a suit tried before a female jury in Denver. They decided in favor of the plaintiff. The case was that of Mrs. Jessie W. Wallace against Mrs. Jessie Ashton, a woman who was claimed damages for a suit which she claimed had not been made to her satisfaction. The women jury was discharged after the verdict was given. Mrs. Wallace's husband was formerly a dress fitter. Then she entered an action Mrs. Wallace's bill each one of the jurors was thought her judgment the worst ever.

DENIED WAGES; SHOOTS RECLUSE

Ohio Man Arrested After Petal Assault on Employer.

Sylvester Sides, a recluse 65 years old, was shot five times with probably fatal effect in his home south of Delta, Ohio, by A. E. Bissel, 34 years old. The latter was arrested in Toledo. Bissel claims he demanded one for work he had done for Sides, when the latter refused him and he shot him in self-defense. Three bullets struck Sides in the arm and two in the leg, in the loin or the home of his nephew, where he is now in a critical condition.

ASK RELEASE OF GIRL SLAYER.

Jessie Morrison, Who Killed Her Rival, Said to Be Dying in Prison.

Interest in the tragic life story of Jessie Morrison, of Eldorado, Kan., is revived through the efforts of influential friends to secure her release from the Kansas State penitentiary for the murder of her school girl friend, Mrs. Olin G. Castle. The young woman, once known throughout the State as a beauty, is said to be dying as a result of her confinement in this man's prison, with sixteen years of a twenty-year sentence yet to serve.

Her beauty has faded, her spirits are dead, and she clamors pitifully for freedom. Those who were once her bitterest enemies are interceding themselves in her behalf for leniency. Ministers are at the head of the movement, and an application for pardon, signed by some of the foremost men and women of Kansas, will soon be in the hands of Gov. Hoch.

The crime for which Miss Morrison is paying the penalty was committed when she and a successful rival in love engaged in a razor duel. Her opponent was Mrs. Olin G. Castle, who, a year before, was married to young Clara Willey, was married to young Olin Castle, only to see Eldorado store that girls had in turn been wooed by him.

Aug. 22, 1895, nine days after the wedding of Clara Willey and Castle, a jealous Jessie Morrison, scorning wife and the fatal battle ensued. It was called by the Chicago Times-Herald "the most sensational and terrible duel ever fought by a woman." Mrs. Castle was carried home with her throat cut from ear to ear, and Jessie Morrison was arrested. The girl was tried for murder in the first degree, but was acquitted on the ground of temporary insanity. Mrs. Castle recovered, but the scar on her throat was a constant reminder of the tragedy. Her husband died a few years later, and she married Sheldon Morrison, a prominent Eldorado man.

Miss Morrison had three trials, in all of which she was found guilty. The first time she was sentenced to twenty years, the second time to ten, and the third time to twenty.

The prominence of the principals of the case made it one of the greatest interest throughout the country. Gov. Hoch twice refused to grant her a pardon, as a member of the Kansas Supreme Court.

W. J. Bryan is quoted as being in accord with much of the President's message to Congress. In particular he is the recommendation that the government be empowered to inspect railroads, and would add a provision against private contributions. He also strongly recommends the postal and guaranteed banks.

The letter written by Senator Foraker of Ohio in response to the resolutions of the Ohio Republican League contained the best wish was for formal announcement of willingness to accept support in the end of his nomination by the party for the presidency. In it the Senator virtually laid down his platform by saying he will stick to his policy of opposition to government ownership and by opposing tariff tinkering.

Upon the eve of the opening of Congress Representative Fowler of New Jersey, head of the House banking and currency committee, issued a prediction of coming financial tragedy of far greater proportions than the present one unless we stop issuing a fiat bond-secured currency. He says that the banks of the country to-day have about $12,000,000,000 in deposits and about the same amount of loans outstanding, against about $2,000,000,000 of gold and $3,000,000,000 of which $2,000,000,000 is in bank, leaving a balance in which the banks are loaned without form of indemnity. He defines as "taking no security" the credit currency the safest security in the world, and always the best security for prompt and successful proper reserves.

Justice Walter Clark of the North Carolina Supreme Court, in his New York address, dwelt on how how the federal constitution was devised to suppress the will of the people rather than to express it. He urged the calling of a convention of the whole people to amend the constitution with present need and genuine conference. He urged the appointment of a Supreme Court for presuming to amend the constitution, and to nullify the acts of Congress, saying that it was complete denial of popular control of this government and that it had been obtained than the placing of such unreviewable power in the hands of men not elected by the people and holding office for life. He said that we made only the form of democratic government.

YEAR 1907 LEAVES A RECORD OF DISASTER

Natural Phenomena and Direful Accident Furnish Long Lists of Dead.

EPITOME OF IMPORTANT EVENTS

Recent Financial Disturbance—Oklahoma a State—Fire and Gift of Millions.

The chronicler who sums the record of 1907 that he may write of it finds himself confronted by an exhibit of destruction and disaster that he had not fully appreciated before. Since the opening day of the year the great earthquakes that have been examined had by large loss of life have numbered 28, an average of eightly more than two for every month. Several of these have been great convulsions of nature. There was the earthquake that destroyed Kingston, Jamaica, out of which came the disgraceful Sweetenham incident; that subsequently occurred other earthquakes and volcanic eruptions in Mexico, Chile and China. An earthquake and immense tidal wave that destroyed the town of Kamagaki, Central Formosa, snuffed out Gaza Hive, and the frightful typhoon at Hongkong, China, killed thousands hundreds of the inhabitants. A heirlooms in the Chesline flooded wiped out 200 lives in Ireland and 100 lives others in Scotland. Among the outcroppings originating in the operations and enterprises of humanity there have been explosions—several of them in mines, others in blast furnaces and on shipboard—and hollow of ships and of railway trains, the collapse of the great unequipped bridge over the St. Lawrence river, near Quebec, and the blowing up of the Pan Ind powder works in Pontiac, Ind. All these produced long catalogs of dead.

The roll of enthusiasm dead is also an extensive one. Sweden has lately been called upon to mourn the decease of its beloved king, Oscar II., and his aged and successor has mounted the throne of government. In Persia, also, the Shah has died and a new one rules. Not death, but abdication, has also changed the governments head in Korea. Duffins, art, science, letters, and the platform have each paid its toll to death in the loss of some foremost representatives. Among the names may be recorded those of former Premier Clemenceau, Premier Peter of France, Senatore Morgan, Pettus and Alger, Galinda A. Rivera, James H. Eckels, Maurice Grau, Richard Mansfield, Joseph Jocelyn, Edward Irving, Bishop Merriamhew, Col. Will S. Hayes, Prof. Alexander S. Herschel, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren), Theodore Tilton, Mrs. Mary J. Holmes, Francis Murdoch and Hiram M. Gonzales, Prof. Wm. McKinley and John Alexander Dowie are also in the list of the well-known; death, a financial disturbance of widespread influence was made itself felt during the last three months of 1907.

The number of States in the Union has been increased to 46 by the admission of Oklahoma.

That modern minds are not appalled by large amounts is shown by one of the year's transactions. The Standard Company has been fined $29,000,000 by a Chicago judge, and John D. Rockefeller has made donations of $32,000,000 to educational projects.

Two great expeditions have been held. That at Jamestown, Va., did not receive the patronage expected and is in the hands of a receiver. The other was in Greater Louisville, Ky.

A public work of vast magnitude was begun when Mayor McClellan of New York broke ground for the construction of the great Catskill aqueduct which in a few years is to convey to the metropolis an inexhaustible supply of pure water.

The Harry Thaw trial in New York and the general strike of telegraphers the country over were subjects of much interest to the public while they continued.

The principal happenings of 1907 are briefly given below:

JANUARY.

2—Week on Rock Island near Volkmar, Kansas, kills 25 persons. Three M. Flood, Republican, elected Governor of New Hampshire by Legislature.

5—Bomb thrown in Fourth Street National bank, Philadelphia.

8—Death of Shah of Persia.

9—Seven Cubans lynched in Charles City, Iowa. Gen. Vindimir Peralez assassinated in St. Petersburg.....30 miners killed by explosion in Pittsburg blast furnace.

10—Typhoon in Philippines kills 100 persons.

11—Fire near Strassburg, Germany, kills 20 dwellers. $7,000,000 fire in Lancaster, Pa.

14—Earthquake destroys Kingston, Jamaica.

19—Sixty-Two Lost in two Big Four railroad wrecks in Indiana.....Mohammed Ali Mirza crowned Shah of Persia.....Admiral Davis and American sailors get sent away from Kingston, Jamaica, by Sweetenham.

20—Death of Judah Flynn Wilson, Indiana author and poet.....Explosion in Southern incident.

21—Fire in Chicago Stockyards destroys $1,000,000 in goods and about the same amount of loans outstanding, assessed value that had received of only $500,000, of which $250,000,000 is in bank, leaving a balance in which the creditors are without form of indemnity. He defines as "taking no security" the credit currency the safest security in the world, and always the best security for prompt and successful proper reserves.

200 ARE ENTOMBED IN PENNSYLVANIA MINE

Terrible Explosion Imprisons All the Men Working in Coal Shaft Near Connellsville.

FIRE ADDS TO AWFUL HORROR.

Darr Workings, Owned by Pittsburg Coal Company, the Scene of Latest Slaughter of Miners.

Two hundred miners were entombed in the Darr mines of the Pittsburg Coal Company near Jacob Creek, on the Youghiogheny River, eighteen miles west of Connellsville, Pa., by the explosion fully 200 are Americans, the others being principally Hungarians.

Fire followed the explosion in the vicinity of the mine Thursday morning and announced to all the surrounding country that a great disaster had occurred under the surface. Smoke now begins to issue in heavy volumes from the mine, which is of the slope variety. The mouth of the mine was wrecked, and the interior together with the fire which was discovered raging inside, prevented any access to many of the imprisoned men. There was nothing to indicate whether it was gas or coal dust that exploded.

Within a few minutes after the explosion the news of the fire and its surroundings by the relatives and friends of the entombed men. Soon after the explosion the slope inside it impossible to enter and the wires and the telephone were destroyed.

The scene of the explosion is on the Pittsburg & Lake Erie railroad, on the Youghiogheny River. Jacobs Creek, on the main line of the road, is about half a mile across the river. It is forty miles east of Pittsburg and eighteen miles west of Cumberland.

The officials of the Pittsburg Coal of the largest and was equipped with the most modern appliances for mining. The Pittsburg Coal Company usually employs from 1,500 to 2,000 men and produces on both sides of the Youghiogheny River. The fuel mined in this field is used for coking purposes. The territory is a rich one for mineral deposits, and the fuel and the mines are said to contain considerable gas.

THIRD HORROR IN A FORTNIGHT

Monongah, W. Va., and Yolande Distinguish Last Lives of Hundreds.

The Consolidation mine horror is the third in the last fortnight. An explosion in mines No. 6 and 8 of the Consolidation Coal Company at Monongah, W. Va., wrecked the interior of the mine, and left from 300 to 500 men and boys dead. Not a soul survived to tell the story. Nearly all the victims were Hungarians, Italians, Poles and Russians, and the number of Americans in the mine was small. Some of the victims were married men, but most of them were single men and common laborers, with a few mechanics and trade workers. Many of the victims were boys employed as trapper boys, door tenders, and at other work about the mine. Many of the victims were married men,

Time It Was Stopped.

Ever since the Mormon exodus, Beaver Island has been charged with every crime in the decalogue, when some enterprising newspaper found it necessary to get up a good story." We clip the following from a St. Ignace paper:

State Game Warden Pierce has declared war upon the Beaver Island fishermen, the "Moonshiners of Michigan," in upper Lake Michigan and will attempt a short injunction reign to reach the fishermen a season and then a long continuance in the shape of the Fish Law, say a Lansing dispatch. About twenty of his elder and more experienced deputies have been notified to hold themselves in instant readiness to start for the Lake Michigan shore, from where the game warden expects to swoop down on Beaver Island. The Beaver Island fishermen are believed to have been responsible for the recent burning of a state game department launch near Petoskey.

Now, Beaver Island is known as a notorious and prosperous fishing center, and we presume there are probably the same percentage of reckless fishermen there as on the main shore. But the biggest capture of the season, involving have reckonings than in which a mainland outfit was involved.

Several big captures were made by the warden at Alpena and several around the St. Ignace region. There are fishermen everywhere on the lakes who defy the law, but this habit of pounding Beaver Island, and making it a sea pigeot for all the crookedness of the straits region, just because it is not able to talk back, should come to a dead stop.

Beaver Island has just as many honest men to the acre as any other part of Michigan.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Bellaire special: An incendiary fire in the Antrim county jail in Mellaire Monday morning threw it into a panic. Sheriff Bennett and a number of men were at work in the jail building when they noticed smoke issuing from the cell door and attempted to open it, when they were met with a volume of flame. The alarm was given and the fire department launched into action. The fire was soon extinguished, and the building had a wet night, already been signed by 1,361 voters, in every three times the number required by the law. A strong organization has been arranged to push a temperance campaign vigorously after the election is called. Impending business men of the county and Traverse City are said to be active in the movement.

Petoskey News: The remains of some person were found in the woods about two miles from Pellston on the 21st by a wood cutter, and from all indications it would had been there about two weeks. All that can be found out at present indicates the killing to be the result of foul play on the part of some unknown parties or party, as the skull was badly crushed and showed the use of a heavy instrument. The remains were later identified as Joe Bigfoot, an Indian from Harbor Springs, who was employed in one of the lumber camps in the vicinity of Pellston.

Dispatches from Boyne City state that the Wallace Lake Lumber Company has closed the most successful season this year of its few years existence, but before another sawdust pile is raised they will pull up stakes and move to the upper peninsula, where the have 10,000 acres of virgin forests which is rich with timber. The Wallace Lake Lumber Company is composed of John Dignet of Boyne City, and Joseph Gardner and Ralph Case of Kingsley, Mich. They started the present mill at Wallace Lake in October, 1902, and in that time have cut an aggregate of 23,000,000 feet of lumber. Jogs have cut 5,000,000 feet the past season.

Bellaire Independent: The district over which Rev. E. M. Corey is pastor contains fifty square miles and has a thousand inhabitants. He has labored to this field for several years. He now has five regular stations. To illustrate, for instance, on last Sabbath he walked twelve miles six miles through a vast forest by means of a blazed trail, and also a bigger swamp—and addressed three congregations. One of these was a large audience in a lumber camp and the other gatherings were at Finkton and Pleasant Valley. Pastor Corey is assisted financially by the Michigan Congregational Home Missionary Society, by Mr. W. D. Porter, superintendent of the E. J. & S. Ry. and by gifts from the people. For example, a Christmas present of twenty dollars in cash from the Hockey congregation has just been received by him.

Traverse City Record: Julian Dupreon, of Provemont, brought a bear to the city today that, if the date on it is correct, was left in one of his fields six years after the country was discovered. The stone is of a kind common along the beach of Lake Michigan and shows that a bear had been washed for some time. On it, appeared a rude portrait of a man with a moustache and above the head are the letters "J. A. T." while below it is the date, "1492." On the back of the stone is a rude drawing that may be a spear while some kind of a bird is also represented. There are other marks on the stone but they have been rendered illegible by time. The stone was found between Centerville and Leland, three and one miles southwest of Leland on section 3. It was lying with the image upward and may have been dug up by a plow or a harrow. The field is about a mile and a half from Lake Michigan. If the date on the stone is correct, it means that a portion of the band that accompanied Christopher Columbus on his western expedition in 1492, was left behind and wandered far into the north, probably chased by hostile Indians. At any rate, the curious stone, which is almost whitehoaved, forms the basis for many queer conjectures.

A Cure for Misery.

"I have found a cure for the misery in my back, poison produces," says H. H. Dunn, of Lourdes, S. C. "It's called Electric Bitters, and comes in 50 cent bottles. It makes up a case of chills or a bilious attack in almost no time, and it puts yellow jaundice clean out of commission." This great tonic medicine and blood purifier gives quick relief in all stomach, liver and kidney complaints and the misery of lame back. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

Used Teeth to Inflict Punishment.

"There has been a disturbance at Chenan," says the North China Daily News. "The mandarin tried to force the soldiers to take their pay in Sycee silver, which is worth about a tael per ounce, and which, when taken by their wives, nearly ran the officer to death. It appears there is an prejudice for bitter, as they took this method of inflicting punishment on the mandarin; and they beaten or stunned the officer they would have bitten him just to punishment by the gentlemen."

Demonstrating the Turbine.

Interesting on the construction and operation of the turbine engine has been added to the course of the Stuyvesant high school in New York city. A turbine engine has been installed, and is shown in operation beside an engine of the reciprocating type. The turbine is doing duty in generating electricity as well as serving for demonstration purposes.

Reads Them by Profiles.

One woman has an album which she calls her photograph. In it are pasted the profiles in shadow of her friends. "My shadowgraph is a character book," said she. "There is a great deal to be learned in the study of profiles. You have no idea how much you can ascertain regarding a person's character just from the study of the thin face."

Foreign Calamity.

"Tarkiff" exclaimed the angry husband, after his chair has given way beneath him. "I fear lest the missionary would come out of that trading stump furniture."—Detroit Free Press.

CONFIDENCE.

My college chum Jonathan Harrod was in love with a girl out west. He showed me her picture one night. She was dark, with a high forehead and shadowy eyes. The mouth and chin were both well formed, but rather masculine. It was a beautiful face, though not pretty.

Although Harrod had loved the girl all his life—and she like it there he might in the sights of the realities—he had a presentiment of some sort or other during the summer that followed his graduation. When he received the following summer he was quieter than ever before and I possibly more gentle and sympathetic. He and I had means together, where he lived an other inexpensive quarters. He now wrote to spend the evenings working and reading. I saw from the first that something ailed him, and, as he no longer received the blue envelope which consumed me to lose my heart, I guessed the reason and asked no questions. He did not become referable, Jonathan thought. His old habit of work was stronger than ever, and now his energies began to appear occasionally in the magazines and in the dear public in readable, his name and to read what wrote with it.

Two years and passed away before Jonathan had made even the slightest reference to his love affair of his and that was when he came into my room one therefore gray November after noon in the office of a object unknown, in his hand was a crumpled piece of paper. This he placed before me on the table, then he went and seated himself before the fireplace, where I could not see his face. The paper was a offering from some school journal or magazine in third verses the wedding of Miss Whitfred Connor to one Adam Schoswell. Only half the article had been clipped evidently, not into half been pasted on a half sheet of note paper. I read the tawdry effusion through then turned it to pieces and dropped it into the wastebasket.

Jonathan, my boy," I said, giving over a wood swipe on the arm of his chair, "who sent you this thing?"

"It did not," he said. "I did there."

Well of course he his sense. "Who envious is the bridegroom, I mean, and not a word accompanied it?"

We were both silent for a moment. The lone wave shrieking cheerily, and outside the wind was howling a lullaby to the snow. Suddenly he said, "When I came here to you just now," he said, "I was quite resolute—lie—the day is so somber—and I had been reading, also all my mail, quite smart stuff. I felt quite well. I wanted to leave this life and end it. Whitfred is the best, I'm—his value went straight to my heart—pa, dirty I love the girl. I remember her face compression. "You lie down here on the lounge before the fire." I commanded him "and stop this brooding." I pushed forward the couch as I spoke, and he dropped on it my as obedient child. He gave me one grateful look and then, under the guise of warmth and the failure of many sleeps, fell fast asleep.

That afternoon there was a while conviction in the air of the mellow Indian Summer. I left there pondering Jonathan's words in returning home.

filled my brain like a sweet and potent anodyne. It conjured up visions as fair as the dreams of Dr. Faustus, and yet—and yet there was a sense of foreboding, a premonition of something ahead, to come.

Whether or not I dozed I cannot say, but suddenly I was aware that some other than Jonathan was in the room and that he was while awake and near, but at the instant. I refused my eyes and there, to my infinite surprise and astonishment, I saw standing opposite me across the table a stylishly gowned young woman.

I started to my feet, with an exclamation on my lips, but as I glanced at her face my tongue was tied, and I remained where I was, dark and with a high forehead and shadowy eyes. The mouth and chin were both well formed, but rather masculine, and also beautiful, though not pretty.

"Who, Connor?" I exclaimed.

"Yes," she answered, with a voice that was low and vibrant, "it is I. When, with her brown eyes fixed on the blue eyes and the color mounting her cheek, she continued: "I have just arrived in the city. Yesterday I learned that my greatest enemy of Jonathan's was into a paragraph from the account of couple's wedding and—the color increased, then quickly subsided—"knowing Jonathan as well, I wished if possible to see him before the clipping reached him. And—you see, I know you also knew him well. Her lips closed tightly for a second, then curved into a smile. Two great tears started from beneath the drooping lashes, but were quickly intercepted.

I looked toward the place where Jonathan lay. A breeze was between him and the chair, and only his self-respiration betrayed his presence. I turned to Miss Connor.

"Jonathan loves you," I said. "Do you love him? Her eyes blushed with a womanly luster, but made her tips quiver. "Do if you do?" I exclaimed, rolling aside the screen with a single swift movement, "he is here."

"Jonathan!"

Then as I left the room I looked back and saw her kneeling at his side.—Brooklyn Standard Union.

Absentminded Professor.

The professor of English in one of our colleges was recently noted for being very absentminded. It was his custom to read in his study with the door before the lecture. One morning after ringing a gong in which there was no response he opened up and, peering over his spectacles, asked politely: "Gentlemen, shall I say to the young ladies I see before me?"

Rent Only to Parents.

There is in Paris a company which constructs apartment houses that are rented only to persons having children. Its motto is: "Save the babies, and the state has had grounding assists in reducing mortality among children in the quarters where the houses are located.

Sensible Advice.

"Be good an' kind," said Uncle Eben, "but at de same time don't be foolish. The fact dat you honestly own an umbrella dat keeps wonderful good Sundays wif a leather keep on rain off'n you."

Black Light.

This curious term, first used by Le Bon of the French Academy of Sciences to describe a form of radiant energy, is defined as the lack of a thin sheet of opaque matter when the room is illuminated with ordinary light. Black light is some of the properties establish the X-ray. It differs from the Roentgen rays, however, Le Bon announced the discovery of this new radiation in 1897—8 on day Magazine.

Ancient "Scold's Chair."

A fine specimen of a "scold's chair" is in the Sheffield museum, city of Sheffield manor, Hallamshire, 12 miles long. It is hewn from 1727 sat for the chair, and is elaborately carved in the roller in bold scroll ornament. The pers is worked by a lever from behind, and the sitter is locked in by falling wicked hours in transit.

European Population.

Of all the peoples of Europe the French have the fewest children and the kids. Germany is the reverse. French fecundity numbers 3.5 persons and the average Irish family 5.52. In England the average is 4.8. The Spanish and Russian closely approach the Irish. In contrast to the French in Europe the French in Canada are the most prolific race in Christendom.

One of India's Plagues.

With snakes and snakes continue to kill vast numbers of people in India, during the last year the bounty listed slain 2,000 tenth by snake bites and reported to be 2,250, as against 21,797 in 1902. The greater mortality is due to the fact that in India food, which draws the snakes into houses and homesteads.

Turkish Gutter's Side Lines.

Apart from his main revenue, the sultan of Turkey draws a handsome revenue from a monopoly he has in Constantinople, from a sugar plantation in the Island of Crete, and from a line of steamships which ply about his coasts.

Painful to Hear.

"It's all well enough to say 'love and ance is bliss,'" begins Miss Yern or, "but what are you to do when you've no time for love? Why, I'm so engrossed and tired that when I can't find out who it is I love."

A Good Reason.

"Don't you get tired of the people who are always looking down in the mouth?" inquired the man of the day to see one now, who invariably I met on the street. "Why, what can I do?" answered the man, "Because he's my dentist."

Silence at Fault.

Symptoms of disease never arise in man haphazard nor in the absence of some adequate cause, therefore however suffrait the correlation of cause and effect may be, it is never impossible, and when we cannot succeed it is our duty as scientific men to conjecture carefully that failure is due to our lack of capacity and not to the absence of a cause.—London Hospital.

Explosion and "Impulsion."

Everyone knows what an explosion is, but perhaps not "impulsion, is less familiar. An explosion depends in the sudden expansion of a force for its production. At 2,500 fathoms the pressure is comparatively small, and the force is due to the source back—that is to say, several times greater than that exerted by the steam on the piston.

Woman Tolls Funeral Bell.

One survivor of the Titanic gave as was Miss Lucy Duff Gordon, of London, Mrs. Yorke. There is an old woman, resident in the lodge gate who can be engaged to toll the bell for the funeral. As the funeral cortege passes into the grounds the chapel bell tolls solemnly to fall, one stroke for each year of the life of the deceased.

Serving Two Masters.

During the occupation of Virginia during the civil war an Irish soldier was guarding the cellarage to an old mansion. One of the ladies of the house with a bottle in her hand tried to pass him. "No," he said, waving her back. "Not a spoon can pass this way without my leave!" "But, sir," said your master." "Sure and the Chancellor.

Sue and the Chancellor.

Having been introduced to the venerable chancellor, the beautiful maiden looked at him earnestly for a moment and then, just to start the conversation, said to the chancellor, sadly: "Don't you feel it awfully trying to have to chancel when you don't feel like it?"

Advice.

—Word was received here yesterday that John Hogan died at Acadia, Calif., one day last week. John Hogan was a pioneer of Charlevoix. He left here a few years ago for the benefit of his health.

—St. James is to have a bustle. There arrived here last week a modern steel cage consigned to the Island and it went over on a tug Sunday. It will be set up for the benefit of the erring. It may be well to mention the fact that history will remain on this shore this winter, and Jim Donley, has promised good behavior.

—John Hosmer, a brother of Capt. M. J. Hosmer, of St. James, died in Toledo Sunday, of pneumonia. Deceased followed the sea, and generally spent his winters on the island. The remains arrived here last night and were taken to the island to-day on the mail tug, accompanied by the two brothers—M. J. and Thos. J.

—We have a curiosity to know, says a neighboring paper, how many road scrapers, plows and other implements belonging to the various townships of the county will be put under shelter the coming winter. The same admonition will apply to farmers who are inclined to leave implements unhoused. They all cost money and will last five times as long if given proper care. This does not apply to this village, our council having this season built a cement block tool house, and it can be said to the credit of the village officers that all the tools of the village are properly housed and cared for.

Lecture Course.

Friday evening the 17th inst. Ralph Bingham will give the next number of the lecture course. Dr. Vincent, who was to have been the 2nd speaker of the Course, will appear April 20th to close the Course. This means a little delay in the lecture by Dr. Vincent. Mayor Very Sick Man.

News from Dr. Armstrong this morning was not very encouraging to his friends—and that means the entire population of Charlevoix.

Following the surgical operation, complications developed that for a time baffled the doctors. The past week the Mayor has been very ill, and as we go to press, his condition is certainly serious.

But still, we hope!

B. W. MILLER DEAD

Stalwart, Honest Business Man Called Hence in the Prime of Life.

Byron W. Miller, merchant, and pioneer of Charlevoix, died at his home in this city last night, of pneumonia.

We cannot recall when the death of a citizen has caused a more distinct shock to this community than when it became known on the street that "Billy" Miller had been given up by his physicians. He had been ill with bowel trouble for several days, but everybody rested in the vigor and well-known tenacity of Billy. Not one on the street could bring themselves to believe that "Billy's" life was in danger. But yesterday morning, after a council of physicians, it was discovered that peritonitis had attacked the patient, and at three o'clock Wednesday afternoon all hope was abandoned.

Byron W. Miller was born near Ogdensburg, N. Y., in 1857. His father was Robert Miller, who survives him, and who is now a resident of this city. With his parents he came to Charlevoix in 1868. In 1869 deceased entered the Sentinel office, and as an apprentice, aided in the publication of the first issue of that paper. He served an apprenticeship of four years, but did not continue as a printer. In early manhood he was married to Kate, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Talbert Carpenter.

He entered the store of Carpenter & Bartholomew, and served there as a clerk for several years, until Mr. Bartholomew retired from the firm, and for several years longer the general mercantile establishment of Carpenter & Miller was known as one of the most reliable mercantile establishments in the Pine Lake region.

About ten years ago failing health compelled Mr. Carpenter to retire, and the interests of the pioneer merchant was bought by Mr. Miller, who has since conducted the business.

The writer of this is performing a journalistic duty under the burden of a personal grief. Byron W. Miller for almost forty years has been his personal friend. For four years, in the days when the SENTINEL was struggling for life in its fragile infancy, this boy stood by him the old Washington handpieces as our only assistant.

He has own sterling qualities of industry and certitude he had climbed the ladder to the front rank of the business men of Charlevoix, and he deserved his success. No man ever lived in this community who enjoyed in a greater degree the confidence of the people than "Billy Miller." His word was "as good as his bond." Frank, generous loyal to his friends, always kind to poor, public spirited and broad-minded, Byr. W. Miller was a citizen that we could ill afford to lose.

He is survived by his wife, two sons—Milo and Earl, and a young daughter, Marjory.

The funeral will occur from the home on State street Friday afternoon, under the auspices of Charlevoix Lodge No. 282, F. & A. M., of which he had been a member many years.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The County Legislators Orders the Court House Rebuilt.

The board of supervisors met in Salvation Army hall Tuesday afternoon, Geo. W. Bailey in the chair, and every member present, but adjourned to Wednesday afternoon to give the board an opportunity to view the court house ruins and then

Wednesday afternoon the board came together prepared to act, and they acted promptly and effectively. After some discussion the board decided its conviction that, before any repairs are provided for, the city should remove the reversion clause in the present conditions of occupation and a clear title to the property given the county. The Charlevoix supervisors gave the board the assurance that this would be done.

The board then adopted a resolution that the court house shall be restored, and sealed ceilings put in. W. H. Hiller, J. H. Graff and W. J. Gallagher were appointed a committee to take the necessary steps and give charge of the work. The committee is to submit plans and specifications and bids to the board to-day. This month has been practically yet been here ever fed. I have also been getting back some pulp from the factory, which I find is excellent feed and which the sugar company gives free to beet growers in proportion to the amount of beets delivered. You will see from this that I have had a very profitable crop in the sugar company's pulp, and also half the whole crop to feed. Several of my neighbors were also quite successful with beets. Henry Heeres, on three acres, grew a crop worth $222.00, which is $74.00 per acre. John Potter, on 1½ acres gave a crop worth $130.00, Frank Brook, on 1½ acres, gave a crop worth $103.71. Henry Petter, on 2½ acres gave a crop worth $136.91. I hope this report will encourage some to go into the raising of sugar beets who have not yet tried it, and encourage those who have not been successful this year to stick to this crop, which I know will be profitable."

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Central Lake Torch: Mr. D. H. Stebbins and Mrs. Stephenia McCartan were married at the home of the bride January 1, 1908, in the presence of a few intimate friends.

Central Lake Torch: The labourers are beginning to appear on the snowcoated ice surface of the lake. Saturday was three inches inches, and up to that date several tongues weighing an average of 10 to 15 pounds had been captured.

A note from Boyne Falls informs the patron that "about eight Boyne Falls business men met at the M. E. parsonage Monday evening and decided to close their places of business on Sundays beginning with the third Sunday in January."

Ludlow Special: Judge Clyde C. Chittenden has just returned from Seattle, Wash., and has given out the statement that he is the origin as judge of the twenty eighth judicial circuit. He intends to tender his resignation to Governor Warner in time for the governor to call a special election in November at which time his successor can be elected. Judge Chittenden has four more years of his term to serve, but because of his hearing failing him and also because of his large interests in the west, he has decided to resign.

East Jordan Enterprise: On January 1st the State Bank of East Jordan increased their capital stock from $25,000.00 to $50,000.00, all being paid in, as is announced in their advertisement in another page. This is another broad step in advance by a banking house that by its careful management, safe and conservative methods, and liberality within reasonable limits, has won for it the confidence of all our people. When the late panic was sweeping the financial centers all over the land, not a depositor in this Bank took fright and ran to withdraw his money for the safety of his bank account. This bank was started in 1901 as a private bank by Geo. R. Martin, who conducted it until 1905 when he sold to H. Rob. Green and Alex. Bloom, under the firm name of Green & Bloom, who had the bank until it, Mr. Green's death, was succeeded by his father, Jos. C. Green. Shortly after this Mr. Bloom retired from the bank, his place being taken by Geo. H. Green, and the firm became Green & Co. July 23, 1908, the bank was incorporated as "The State Bank of East Jordan, with a capital of $25,000.00, Jos. C. Green, president, and Geo. H. Green, cashier. From that time the business increased steadily until we see the results as outlined above.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER II. (Continued.)

"Very well," the merchant said coldly. "If you insist on it, I must be a sleeping partner, of course, it would make a great difference to my health."

"Oh!"

"You are at present getting fifteen per cent, a month, and live per cent commission. These are exceptional times, considerations of any risk that you may run. We shall dry up for the time being, and your salary will be cut down to twenty pounds and two and a half commission."

"Hum! Ha! Very much better offer!"

"Hum! Ha! Very much better offer, I say, for we may be ruined if we go on. My business is a very type and emblem of stale middle-aged respectability. The majority has was always of the gimlet, the majority that was without a wrinkle, and, in short, from the beginning of Girdlestone's laid hand to his hollow fingertips and his pouty toes, there was not a flaw which the most severe critic of deportment could have detected. Let us add that the morality of the cashier was as irreproachable as his person—that he was a distinguished soldier and an accomplished traveler, with a extensive memory and a mild acquaintance with the good things of a lifetime. Combine all these qualities, and one would scarcely regard the major as a most desirable acquaintance.

Standing at the head of the head stairs where which had up to the present time, one which its occupiers irreverently term the "Tag and Bobtail," he was explaining to a bull-necked, olive-complexioned young man, the series of warnings and intermarriages which had culminated in the production of his own pretty, black-haired figure. His companion, who was a little taller than the Major, and had the great African force of that name, seemed to have lost some of the vitality of youth and blained gloomily to the major's family reminiscences. He was interested in them which he made no attempt to conceal.

"It's as plain as the fingers of my hand, the old soldier said, in a whisper, "that Jim and Bob, if we were speaking from under a feather bed, Gladiator—Gladiator, I mean, Miss Lucilla Sinclair, of Snarkleton, a cousin of old Sir Joseph. The tout tapped his chubby with the silver head of his walking stick on the door, and stepped forward Snaggle. "She marries Crawford of the Hussars, and Frank, Gladiator, the boy's fords, that's him"—here he elevated his voice—"Gladiator, and here's that little children, Jemmy, Harold and John." Up went three silver fingers. "Jemmy, Harold and John, Gladiator, and then Charley Gladiator, back from away with her. Charley, Gladiator, takes a little fancy to Bob's girl, Charley, and then my fingers—

"My, hang your fingers," Gladiator exclaimed with emphasis. "This very interesting, I know, but I wish you could enlighten if you write it out."

"Write it out! I shall, my dear," the major cried enthusiastically, by no means abashed. "It's as easy as anything. Let me see, I'm up on a bit of fashionable gossip, too. Lady Blanchard's cousin, the Duke's office, of course. Though for that matter, Gladiator, Lady Blanchard's cousin's a—I was going to say a bit of a—Gladiator, I was going to say a bit of a—Gladiator, I was speaking of us to the Duke's grace Moore, of the Hilles the other day, and he said, 'Gladiator, Gladiator,' he says he. 'Fine name,' says he. 'A very fine name, Gladiator, I like it myself,' says he. 'I'm proud to meet him,' says he, 'and you shall say so,' he says, 'to the head of county Waterford.'

"Some lively tour, I suppose," the young man said. "Tho'ro in the city, and thoroughly enjoyed it, I'm sure. Shall I see you tonight?"

"Well, I'm rather in a hurry," said the clean-shaven warrior, he looked after the retreating form of his late companion with anything but a pleasant expression on his face. The young man was quite a little taller than he was half an inch down the street, on which the major was possessed of a very fine nose and grown accordingly, the pair roughed it uncomfortably as best they might.

"Have you had your letter?" the major asked. The lieutenant was expecting his quarterly remittance from his friends at home, and they were both anxiously awaiting it.

"No, I'm sorry to say," he said.

"Then they should have sent a sixty age."

"What you—how do you know that?" the major cried.

Major Clutterbuck took his unoccupied hand out of his trousers pocket and placed it upon the table. "You know me Gladiator," he said. "I never so any considerable amount of money. I use it to play cards for high stakes with less in your purse, and if I was to change one they'd all go like a shift of smoke. Bar this money I've hardly a penny."

"Nor me," said Von Hammer, despondently.

"I say, Hammer, I can't stand that young fellow much longer. He's a cold-blooded, flinty-hearted, calculating sort of a man."

"What for did you work him your friend, then?"

"Why, the old soldier confessed, "it seemed to me that if he wanted to be quite sweet at cards, Tobias Clutterbuck might as well have the handling of it as any one else. He stays a sixty game for low stakes, and never throws away a chance. I think I've been a lower in pocket by knowing him, while as to one character, I'm very sure I'm the worse there."

"What's the matter with him?"

"What's not the matter with him? If he's agreeable he's not natural, and if he's natural he's not agreeable. I don't pretend to be a saint, I'm sorry some I've tried to be a saint, I've done some more before I die, but there are some things I can't stand I do. If I live to be sixty it's all fair and above board. I never cheated anything but game of skill, and I reckon on its skill bringing me out on the right side, taking one night with another through the year. Again, at billiards I may not always play my best, but I'm unmistakably. You don't want a whole room to know if a point what your game is. On the last man to preach, but I don't like that cheap, and I don't like that Jesuitical person Jesse of his. I've spent more than the greater part of my life trading fellow Hammer, very far out, either."

"Yet did you say his name was?" Von Hammer said, suddenly.

"Gladiator."

"Is his father a merchant? One who trades with the Africans?"

"Yes."

Von Hammer took a leaky pocketbook from inside his jacket and scanned a leaf full of names therein. "Ah, it is the same," he cried at last triumphantly, pointing to the book and replacing it. "Gladiator & Co., African merchants, Gladstone street, City."

"Those are they."

"Do you say they are rich?"

"Very rich. Rich, I say, very rich." he laughed. "I know them not as friends, I know them and their offers well."

"What are you driving at? Let's have it out—let us speak."

"I tell you," said the German, suddenly becoming exceptionally solemn and leaving his hand up and down on the air to emphasize his remarks. "In three or four years, one year at the most, there will be no firm of Girdlestone. They are ruined, I know somewhere." He blew an imaginary feather up into the air to demonstrate the extreme fragility of the house in question.

SEES PERIL AHEAD.

Judge Grosscup Denounces Corporations as the People's Wealth.

Judge Peter S. Grosscup, the famous Chicago jurist, is firm in the conviction that the corporate control of the country which constitutes a danger to the republic. In a recent address in Chicago he said: "We are in the midst of a most phenomenal national development. We have a greater circulation of money per capita than ever before. We are paid it in full large enough. Labor wages are being paid, working days are more skilled, industry and commerce and our capacity for producing products are larger than ever was the case in the world's history, and we are the richest people in the world. Yet, in the midst of all this, we are in a most perilous condition. The wealth of the people is in the control of a few, and the control of the matter is immediately after such election."

As to the proper time for tariff revision he said: "The time for tariff revision is now, and the time for tariff revision is now, and the time for tariff revision is now. The time for tariff revision is now, and the time for tariff revision is now. The time for tariff revision is now, and the time for tariff revision is now. The

A POLAR BEAR HUNT

Adventure in the Frozen Wastes of the Arctic.

RACE TO SAVE A MAN'S LIFE

A Mile Run For a Rifle That at First Refused to Do Its Work—A Shot That Brought the Great Brute to the Camp as Food For Men and Dogs.

The long arctic night was breaking. Like hibernating polar bears, we had lived the winter through under cover of a great drift of snow. This served us as a thick blanket for our little hut and helped to keep warm the thirty-nine shipwrecked men who had been marooned on the desert island of Rodolpa, in the frozen waters of the polar sea.

One day, after a flurry of storm, I took a walk in Cape Pauleen. On my way back to camp I stopped on the highest rocks of the promontory to look out toward the ice covered sea. Northward and westward great black shadows straggle in the white revealed the open water, and overhead long dark streaks of vapor, another indication of a "mud," or open water, underneath.

Turning my eyes southward and Teddy Bay, I beheld the panorama of the camp spread out before me. Its hut and stable tent, the two little observatories and the numerous caches of food stores gilding the appearance of an arctic village. Down in the bay which was the lee of the bay met the fast frozen land sheet I could distinguish the silhouette of one of my men taking a tide observation. Behind him rose a tebelling ridge of ice pinnacles, which effectually "doctored" his view toward the sea.

From my greater elevation I made out the form of a great polar bear, lumbering the rough ice toward the land. As I watched he reached a high cake of ice and, standing upon it, raised himself up on his hind quarters and looked over toward the spot where Mr. Long, the observer, was at work. Then I realized his object. There was no one else in sight, and Long was unarmed. Could I reach camp, seize a rifle and make my way out on the bay before the bear began his attack?

In the cold, crisp air I ran the mile or so toward the hut, a race that fortunately was down grade. I rushed into the house, secured my rifle and set off as fast as my legs would carry me toward where I had last seen the bear. Usually the dogs at camp thought it great sport to join in such a chase, for this time they crouched around the hut, whining and whimpering and refusing to follow as I ran past them with my rifle. I soon came up to Long and, warning him to lock out for the approaching bear, of which he was still all unconscious, proceeded at re duced speed, as the ice was now very rough, in the direction of the advancing bear. As I was crossing the edge of the first pressure ridge I saw the bear coming my way. He caught sight of me at the same moment, raised himself on his haunches to get a better view, and then started in a rope over the ice rakes in my direction.

I raised my carbine, took a quick sight and pulled the trigger. Instead of the usual quick sing and explosion I felt the slack, gummy motion of the bolt that told me that the lock was frozen. In shooting the gun a few days before I must have let some oil in the lock.

I worked the bolt back and forth, trying to warm up the mechanism by friction, the great bear clambering rapidly and noisily over the broken ice rakes toward me all the while. Once more I pulled the trigger. The unexpected happened, and the cartridge exploded but to my haste, although so close, I made a clear miss.

However, the flash and the report must have frightened the beast, for he made off. I climbed in pursuit, but on account of the heavy ice did not see him again until he had passed about 200 yards between us and was still going with great leaps in the direction of the open sea.

I aimed and fired just as he leaped between two great ridges. This time he fell to a lump. With the bear's fall the dogs set up such a howling, barking and yelping as I had seldom heard, even from our noisy pack. Long ran to camp now started for the fallen king.

The bullet had gone through his back, penetrating his blind quarters, but he was able to swing around on the flat floe and dealt fearful blows with his great fore paws. But the combat was to unequal. One more bullet and the great bear was beyond all further ills.

The men from camp had now arrived, and the dogs were caught and harnessed to a sledge. Upon it we lashed the carcass of the bear and then, cutting a trail back to land, landed our load to the hut, a welcome addition to the larder for men and dogs.—Anthony Fiala in Youth's Companion.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A Two Story Bird's Nest.

There is a bird where Lima is a marvel of ingenuity and labor—the tailor bird of Asia, says the Chicago News. This little architect constructs a two story nest, with three rooms in it. The entrance is at the bottom, and it leads into the family living room. That is to say, the whole family, after the young birds are hatched, nestle in this room, just as we meet in our sitting room. Above the family room are two apartments, one for the female to lay and hatch her eggs in and the other for the male to sleep in. The nest is neatly made, but its most remarkable feature is its decoration. As soon as it is finished the male goes off and collects trophies, which he brings to the nest alive. He is very careful not to hurt them as he places them here and there about the nest, and his wife's chamber grows with their light while she sits over her eggs. The family room is decorated in the same way and frequently the outside of the nest. The flies are not used as food, for when one dies it is thrown away and a live one is put in its place. It has been suspected that the fear of the fireflies keeps serpents and other enemies away from the nest.

Tips For a Boy.

A New York paper asked a number of prominent persons what they considered the most important things for a boy to possess. A high school master answered:

"There are some things in a boy that have very little effect on me. One of these is good looks. So long as a boy is strong, healthy, with a clear eye and a clean, manly face, it makes little difference to me whether he is red headed and freckled or not."

Another school principal expressed his preference for—

"Boys that refuse to borrow their neighbors' brains.

"Boys that study to know and test to show off or to pass examination.

"Boys that work hardest at the work which they find most difficult.

"Boys that don't hate a teacher because she has to reprimand them, but still regard her as a friend.

"Boys that don't make excuses, but when corrected take it like a soldier."

A Boy's Composition on Breathing.

Breath is made of air. We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our liver and kidneys. If it wasn't for our breath we should die while we slept. Our breath keeps the life a-going through the nose while we sleep. Does that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait till they get out of doors. Bad breathing in a room make bad, unwholesome air. They make carbonicle. Carbonicle is poisoner than hard dogs. A heap of soldiers was in a black hole in India, and a carbonicle got in that there hole and killed nearly every one afore morning. Girls kill the breath with corsets, cause they squeeze the diagram. Girls can't run or holler like boys, cause their diagram is squeezed too much. If I was a girl I'd rather be a boy, so I can holler and run and have a great big diagram.—Chicago News.

A Chicago Fearless Bird.

So unafraid are humming birds of late that they will readily enter open windows of houses if they see flowers within. I have even read of their visiting the artificial flowers on a lady's hat when she was walking out, and other writers speak of their taking sugar from between a person's lips. In a room they become confused and, being so small, are not to be driven themselves by striking against objects. More than once, says a writer in the Outing Magazine, I or members of my family have caught the fugitivoid in our cells for short good and released them in the open air. It is of no use to try to keep them in captivity unless, possibly, it were in a greenhouse where there were plenty of flowers, for no artificial food has ever been found which will nourish them. Yet even there they would probably kill themselves by flying against the glass.

Fairy Light.

A game for indoors or out. Take a piece of cloth about two yards square—a tablecloth or sheet will do. Have the hold by the players. Upon the cloth have a white feather. When all is ready have the players sing to feather:

Fairy white, fairy light,
We will blow with all our might,
And none will be afraid.
If you fall on any one,
He must then renounce the fun
Till a forfeit he has paid.

Then toss the sheet upward, setting the feather flying. The object is to run under the feather, not letting it escape, and at the same time blowing it away from yourself and toward some one else, who in turn defends himself. Each player touched by the feather is retired from the game until a forfeit is paid at the end, when a new attack may be begun.

His Pride.

Has anybody seen my Fritz?
Too may not think him pretty,
But he's the dog that I love best,
In country or in city.
His hyby's a sort of grizzly gray
And not so very curly,
But he can run like anything,
And turn both late and early.

Sometimes he minds me very well,
And sometimes when I call
He only sits and wags his tail
And does not pay at all.
But the reason why he acts that way
Fritz, dear, I know full well
He thinks that he owns me.

So, though he has a heap of sense,
Twould be just like this now
To think that I'm the one that's lost
And not my dear Fritz, I vow.
So I'm off coaxing for the bite
Of Fritz, dear, now and ever,
While I am asking for my dog
Of every one I meet.

The SPORTING WORLD

Papke, the Illinois Thunderbolt.

Billy Papke, the Illinois thunderbolt, is setting such a fast pace for the middleweights at present that it will take a snake house to catch him. His latest feat, that of knocking out two fairly good men in the same night and within twenty minutes of fighting, is something that made the other boys in that division sit up and take notice, and it now looks as though Papke will have to go up against some real hard game before he will get a match. Papke is built on the same plan as Terry McGovern and has the same style of boring in and swinging with both hands until something drops, and it usually does. He is clean cut and has a great pair of mauleers, muscular and broad. He has little science, but is clever in his own way and never gives an opponent a chance to set.

The Subject of Fight Fakire.

Judging by the stand taken by the Philadelphia fight promoters regarding the Jack O'Brien-Jack Johnson match the crime of faking, to which O'Brien confessed, was more heinous than that to which Joe Gans confessed. The difference may be this: O'Brien, a white man, boasted about his offense, while Gans, colored, pleaded the facilitation of his race and tried to apologize and live it down.

The public was willing to forgive Gans, whose wrongdoing was engineered by a white man to whom he naively turned for advice and instruction as to the best means to realize on his ability as a boxer. Also it should be remembered Gans' partners in crime were white, and they invariably received the long end of the money. His white master depended on letting on the events for his trouble in arranging the fakes, thus showing that the white men were willing to make Jack a crooked compact with the black man's master for the benefit of the third processes and then shoulder the crime on the black.

For years prior to his confession and his attempt to fight on the level Gans was pronounced the greatest fakir in the business. Since severing his connection with his white master and practically conducting his own business he has been an honor to the much abused sport.

American Long Distance Runs.

The immense popularity at present enjoyed by long distance running in this country must give the foreign athletic commentators, who are accustomed to cavil at American ideas of sport, cause for much reflection.

These people generally refer to American athletics as nothing but another phase of the race for the dollar, the commercialism prevalent in our best known sports being cited as specific evidence for their assertions. Such a quality as admiration for pluck and endurance is considered by them to be a stranger to the American makeup. It remained for Marathon road races and the cross country runs to furnish an answer to these critics.

No gates can be taken at events of this kind, and the participants are compelled to pay their own trailing and resting expenses, wherefore there can be no question of their being in the game for anything but glory.

When crowds of many thousands turn out to watch the uninteresting spectacle of a woman runner loping home after a long race, surely there can be no decay in the American's recognition of athletic prowess.

STORY WRECKS GIRLS' SCHOOL

Proprietress of Fashionable Institution Files Bankruptcy Petition.

The name of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, figuratively speaking, is written across the voluntary petition in bankruptcy filed in the United States District Court in New York by Mrs. Mathilda Deering DeMille. The chief figure in the Thaw tragedy is the blight that has, after a two-year struggle, forced the widow of the brilliant collaborator of Belasco into decision and put the mother of two successful playwrights of today in plead before a court of law to be relieved from the obligation of her debts that she may make a fresh start. For it was the story of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw as the witness saw it that brought notoriety to the fashionable school at Compton Lake, N. J., in which Mrs. DeMille sought to rehabilitate the fortune crippled by the death of her husband. This latest action was the climax of a string of circumstances that have followed in logical sequence the quiet spring by Evelyn of the life of a chorus girl among the leader footlights of Broadway to the seclusion of the Compton Lake notable institution for the fashionable educated, the school to the last detailed account of the school when they learned that their daughters had the girl as a companion for many months, and the various social ostracisms and derogatories which followed had been felt.

WILL TRY TO CONVERT KANSAS.

Next Year's Evangelistic Campaign Planned to Include Whole State.

"Kansas for Christ" is to be the slogan of a home-made evangelistic campaign that is to be rushed simultaneously in every county of the Sunflower State next year. Hundreds of ministers of various denominations, together with numerous well-known evangelists, are to hold revivals. An entire year will be required to complete the campaign and it is to be made to concentrate in the wide country districts and to reach the people of religious work, carried forward on strictly nonsectarian lines. The great revival is to be under the direct leadership of Rev. William Howard Hoover, of Topeka, who planned the undertaking will be subject to the general supervision of a board of 100 ministers and two laymen from each of fifteen denominations now represented.

UTES RAID UTAH RANGE.

Governor Appeals to Washington to Drive Indians from State.

Bands of the Indians from Colorado are traveling in southern Utah, killing sheep and cattle and, according to the report received in Salt Lake City by Gov. John C. Parker. A band of Indians followed three cowboys near Ventnor, San Juan county, one day, and killed the pinto of riflies concealed them to drive their cattle into a little canyon where they gave view trailing on to the winter range, the starving to death of the herd. Dead cattle and cattle are still common in the canyon. Gov. Parker will take up the matter with the authorities at Washington, as Utes are forbidden to enter Utah.

COAT OF MINISTER EXPLODES.

Some Substance in Lining of Garment Bursts Into Flame.

The Rev. William H. Holmes, clergyman of Buffalo, Ohio, was the victim of a peculiar explosion. His coat suddenly burst into a blaze and was reduced to ashes in an hour. He had no matches in his pocket. He thinks the explosion was caused in the lining of his coat, which came from a Pittsburg department store.

ORIENTALS RIOT VICTIMS.

Fifteen Hundred Are Stone Lodge-bridge Chinese Quarter.

Because they believed that a prominent citizen had been murdered in a Chinese restaurant 1,500 men folded the thinnest restaurant in Lethbridge, Alberta, and left a wake behind. Hundreds of men and boiler drive were smashed and doors and windows and other fixtures of buildings were reduced to splinters. The men yelling were possessed had a brigade of mounted police had to be called out to quell the disorder. The story had gone abroad that Harry Smith, one of the best known merchants of the city, had been fatally wounded in a restaurant. Neither Smith nor anyone else had been hurt, but Smith was excused and he was pinned for the night that, after a two-year struggle, forced the widow of the brilliant collaborator of Belasco into decision and put the mother of two successful playwrights of today in plead before a court of law to be relieved from the obligation of her debts that she may make a fresh start. For it was the story of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw as the witness saw it that brought notoriety to the fashionable school at Compton Lake, N. ROBBERS CAUGHT AFTER BATTLE

Get $2,000 from Camden Point (Mo.) Bank, but Are Taken by Citizens.

The Bank of Camden Point, in Camden Point, Mo., there were robbed at St. Joseph, was robbed by three men of $2,000 in cash yesterday and $2,000 was taken. A battle between citizens and the robbers followed and many shots were exchanged, but the robbers escaped. They were pursued by a posse and captured about noon near Edgerton Junction. The robbers were discovered in Prof. Barbour's office, one of Camden Point college, who gave a light in the table and called up the police. Four policemen occurred after the alarm was given, and the chase and the battle ensued for two miles.

MAKE RAID ON MURDER SCHOOL.

Police Swoop Down on Black Hand Institution Learning How to Kill.

Intensely interested in a lesson explaining the manner in the business of the black a school's students should be changed to the Black Hand society, the members of the Black Hand members were surprised by a visit from the police. Lieut. Joseph Mooney, of the police, assisted by detectives from all parts of the city, swooped down upon the school, the "Black Hand" of the Italian band, together with the students in the act of taking the lesson while were setting as instructor a Sicilian, who was in the Pittsburg police.

SHOOTS TWO IN A CAFE.

Waiter Causes Excitement—Falls in Attempt to Commit Suicide.

William Polanes, a waiter formerly employed in Horn & Hardart's restaurant at Ninth and Filbert streets, in the central part of Philadelphia, entered the place and after being refused a position shot Mrs. Mary C. Wheeler, an employee, and Frank Bowman, the head waiter. Both are said to be in critical condition. Polanes also aimed two shots at the cashier, but they went wide. He then held the revolver to his head, but the weapon failed to explode. A few persons were in the restaurant but no number of them saw powerful Polanes and turned him over to a policeman. The restaurant is in the shopping district, and the shooting caused excitement in the vicinity.

SAYS ERRORS IN NAVY UNFIT IT FOR BATTLE

Expert Declares the Boasted Fighting Ships Are Merely Death Traps.

ARMOR BELT IS TOO LOW.

Defects in Construction Pointed Out and Protection System Is Scored.

Henry Reuterdahl, associate of the United States Naval Institute and American editor of "Engineering Ships" is the author of a startling article on "The Needs of Our Navy" in the January McClure's. Mr. Reuterdahl's exposure on naval matters is not disputed and neither is his patriotism. He argues with President Roosevelt that a navy must be built "and all its training given in time of peace" and with this in view he exposes defects in our first-class battle ships and armored cruisers which all but make them unsafe as a defense and which are not heavy sea and in real action.

Mr. Reuterdahl's criticism appeal to be the more amazing on account of the contention that most, if not all of the weak points he emphasizes, will be acknowledged by sea-going officers, "or, if the reader is sufficiently interested, by the testimony of his own eyes."

His principal points are the following:

That the chief primary error of the American battle ships is "their vulnerability to gunfire; it will do no good, leaving the broad side of the vessel exposed to the shells of the enemy."

That this defect has been pointed out time and again; that other nations have long ago discarded it as fatal and now have armor wrapped around the hulls of their vessels from "a foot below the water to the upper deck."

That, despite repeated accidents on board our ships, the Navy Department persists in the opposed of plans by which the greatest guns on the ships are direct to be placed in proximity to the powder magazine.

"That other nations long since have discarded the idea of officers and men and have installed the defect by use of common sense and ordinary precautionary measures."

That, with regard to the protection of experts, our battle ships have been built so that "if the ship be struck and ships are in action, the sea would wash over the vessels, rendering the guns useless and practically leave the ship to the mercy of the enemy."

The cheers in the American navy who commend the battle ships are unanimous, he (sic) (sic) that under existing conditions young men cannot (illegible) and that the navy is hardly crippled as a result.

That there is no such "harmonious agreement" in Washington; too much personal rage in the Navy Department that (illegible) quite a schism because of the harowed's harmonism in details, and that with the Secretary of the Navy a civilian, he should have a board of expert advisers.

Other matters are dwelt on, but the foregoing are by far the most important. An expressive fight on water between United States is the recent war with Japan, says Mr. Reuterdahl, and with Japan, says Mr. Reuterdahl, and the same way well be true of the next war into which this nation is plunged. The issue is so important and the stake so tremendous that the sea power of this nation is entitled to every respect to meet the crisis will be the victor.

Stricken Suite Abolished.

Judge Dunne, in the criminal court of Cook County, Chicago, has announced the abolishment of the stricken jury system and the postponement on Monday of the cases of the prisoner from Blackwell's island. He says the prisoner from Blackwell's island, he can not see why it is feasible that there is a group of decency in every human being and that with proper treatment there is hope for the reformation of many, even of those who have been in prison or reformatories. Particularly does he make an appeal to those who have offered any prospect of success in this direction. He says he has confined only to the unfortunate by following benignities upon the "Bowery."

Left Trumpets Baby Carriages.

Under the wheel tax law recently passed by the Illinois State Legislature, for which the Governor has instigated his inaugural address, a tax is levied on "all cars on wheels that use the city streets, with the single exception of baby carriages, will pay a wheel tax." The money thus raised is to be used in the upkeep of the streets. It is expected that the revenue will amount to $300,000 each Longest Christmas Tree a Year.

In discussing the effect on the forests of the country by the use of Christmas trees, Mr. Meniscal, forester of Michigan, says that 1,000,000 are used each year, cutting Finnish United States forests. The tree is perfect in fulfillment emphasized with the decorations of the forest fire and accidental lumbering. If planted four feet apart the Christmas tree would grow in twelve years. He says that trees suitable for Christmas trees are not grown in forests, where reproduction is more important, but in the open, and there is room for an entry against the "Christmas tree." Mr. Meniscal says the land to grow trees. According to Mr. Meniscal, the center of the Christmas tree industry is in the big cities of the East, New York City and the New England States, where 500,000 trees, the bulk of the total, are sold. The state, New Hampshire, the Berkshire Hills, in New

BILL IN CONGRESS TO CURB GAMBLING

Measures Introduced by Texas Members Would Prevent Options in Cotton and Grain.

MAY COVER DEALS IN STOCK

Idea Threatens to Place an Embargo on Market Speculation of All Kinds.

Washington correspondence:

THERE has been a sudden awakening of the people of the country to the fact that something is going on in Washington besides talking and possibly, too, which aims to place an embargo on speculation in stocks. Some of this awakening opened up a regular shed of letters from the interests threatened to the members of Congress, who have taken up the proposed legislation.

The venue which calls forth these letters, in two bills introduced by Senator Culberson, of Texas, and Representative Lamb, of Virginia, seeks to place an end to all gambling in grain and cotton, and to place an end to all gambling in stocks, and possibly, too, which aims to place an embargo on speculation in stocks.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR.

Charles H. Mills, who assaulted his wife at Boyne City recently and in another affair on the charge of murder, has been bound over to the Circuit court for trial. He was released under bonds of $10,000. Hopkins, it is said, became angry at his wife because she would not leave the Salvation Army and struck her on the head with a stone, seriously injuring her.

A Saline News: The carcass of the dog Bull moose killed by N. W. Wilson, in the Gaylord hay country, on the 15th of November arrived in Chicago Thursday, and that the Peter Lisman band marched preparatory to being dressed and disposed of as Mr. Mendell may direct. More than a thousand pounds the dog fellow weighed on the day he was killed by the Gaylord man. Mr. Mitchell was delighted to hear at midnight of the chase that reached Friday, Saturday for nine hours, and shoot one school ma'am and killed the moose. The head of the animal is a trophy of a hard-shooting at Big Gap.

Petoskey News: For some time there has been heard a rumor that a new lime company had absorbed the other business of this nature in this part of the state. Now, however, the facts are, and still it is becoming known that the new company is the Northern Michigan Lime Company. They have all bought the other concerns here but have contracted for a large amount of the lime product of the Michigan Lime Co., the Elk Rapids Iron and Lime Co. and the Superior Lime Co. The new corporation, whose offices will be in Grand Rapids, will handle all sorts of building materials and will probably very soon become one of the largest jobbing concerns in Michigan. The officers of the new company are Homer Sly, Ex Rapids, president; Homer Zapp, Grand Rapids, vice president; Morgan Collins, secretary, and H. H. Hopper, Grand Rapids, treasurer and general manager.

Charlevoix Courier: James Reid and John Newton, two of Northport's most prominent citizens, passed through the city today on their way to Elk rapids where they will enjoy a few months' vacation in travel. They will make the trip to Los Angeles, and after visiting California will return via the Panama canal and will stop at Charlevoix on the time will be spent in traveling about, although California will occupy most of their time. Mr. Reid is looking forward with intense pleasure to the trip, as it is the longest vacation he has had in 22 years, during which time he has built up the company his business, one of the most successful mercantile houses in the state. He has not taken a vacation a little time to recreation. Mr. Newton is a retired farmer, and above the death of his wife a great sufferer among his children, having given up his home. This is also his first extended trip.

Charlevoix Courier: Nov. 1, plying the waters Northport and Manitoupoint to the bottom at Manitoupoint due to striking a rock in the channel there the night before. The Manitoupoint was returning from Northport with a full load of cars and night into the harbor the boat struck the rock and stuck fast. Divers before the engine room. The boat was towed to Manitoupoint Sunday morning to get the dry dock there, but it was impossible to keep the water down with the pump at the dock and she was towed to the dock in Manitoupoint. The big boat was tied up at her dock in Manitoupoint where she lied had sunk in 17 feet of water. Before she can make her trip to Milwaukee for repairs, it will be necessary to secure additional pumps. No one was injured in the accident and no damage was done to the train or car.

Petoskey News: The accident which occurred at Northport last night to the Manitoupoint Lake Company's boat which had run on the rocks in the channel at the entrance to the harbor was caused by the large amount of water in the engine room. The boat was towed into port and will be repaired at the dock. The boat was not injured in the accident and no damage was done to the train or car.

Petoskey News: For some time there has been a rumor that a new lime company had absorbed the other business of this nature in this part of the state. Now, however, the facts are, and still it is becoming known that the new company is the Northern Michigan Lime Company. They have all bought the other concerns here but have contracted for a large amount of the lime product of the Michigan Lime Co., the Elk Rapids Iron and Lime Co. and the Superior Lime Co. The new corporation, whose offices will be in Grand Rapids, will handle all sorts of building materials and will probably very soon become one of the largest jobbing concerns in Michigan. The officers of the new company are Homer Sly, Elk Rapids, president; Homer Zapp, Grand Rapids, vice president; Morgan Collins, secretary, and H. H. Hopper, Grand Rapids, treasurer and general manager.

Charlevoix Courier: James Reid and John Newton, two of Northport's most prominent citizens, passed through the city today on their way to Elk rapids where they will enjoy a few months' vacation in travel. They will make the trip to Los Angeles, and after visiting California will return via the Panama canal and will stop at Charlevoix on the time will be spent in traveling about, although California will occupy most of their time. Mr. Reid is looking forward with intense pleasure to the trip, as it is the longest vacation he has had in 22 years, during which time he has built up the company his business, one of the most successful mercantile houses in the state. He has not taken a vacation a little time to recreation. Mr. Newton is a retired farmer, and above the death of his wife a great sufferer among his children, having given up his home. This is also his first extended trip.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Normal Notes.

The class is again at work after a two week's vacation, during which we all enjoyed a pleasant time.

Miss Janie Mitchell, of the class of '05, who has been teaching the Nowland school is now substituting for Miss Stimson in the north ward school, as Miss Stimson is ill.

Miss Julia Hancroft, of the class of '07, who has been teaching the Davis school near Boyne Falls, is now doing some review work in the Normal.

The class expect to give a reception to the Alumni next Saturday evening.

Miss Himes spent her vacation at her home in central Illinois.

The class appreciated the pretty calendar sent us by the Charlevoix County Herald.

Book Foolishness.

"When attacked by a cough or a cold, or when your throat is sore, it is rank foolishness to take any other medicine than Dr. King's New Discovery," says C. O. Edmonds, of Kingsville, Ga. "I have used Dr. King's New Discovery" seven years and I know it is the best remedy on earth for coughs and colds, croup, and all throat and lung troubles. My children are subject to croup, but New Discovery quickly cures every attack." Known the world over as the king of throat and lung remedies. Sold under guarantee at F. G. BEAVER ISLAND NEWS.

Mr Miles Stafford who has spent the holidays in Manistee returned home Monday.

Capt. Chas. Allen returned from South Haven last week. He was accompanied by Miss Hattie Hoffman.

Joe Peter on Indian Old High is laid died Saturday night as a result of drinking Dudoux of aconite in mistake for Jamaica ginger, and had a very narrow escape. Prompt approval of Dr. Wilkinson upon the same saved a life and would now also be in the Happy Hunting ground. This ginger is a favorite medicine with the Indians for the cure of cold, and on making a purchase of this liquid the most wise keeper on the island sold them two bottles of aconite in mistake, with the above result.

Word reached here Monday that Capt. John T. Bonner of this place died at Toledo, Ohio from an attack of Pneumonia. The news of his sudden and unexpected death came as a terrible blow to his many relatives and friends here on the island, as one had just left for his home. Capt. Bonner was well known in marine circles, having held several responsible positions on the lakes, and also played the destination of being one of the last vessel Captains in this region. The Captain had a lovely father, being upright and honorable and possessing those sterling qualities which goes make up a successful navigator, and his many friends and relatives will be grieved to learn of his early demise. He was but thirty years, years of age, and unmarried.

WHEN THEY ARE NOT WANTED

Some People Seem to Have Faculty for Unceremoniously Butting in.

"Have you ever noticed, said the melancholy man, "how it is the vocation of certain people to go to the all places of resort where they are not wanted? I suppose that if they were sage of their calling they would feel bad about it. But, as a matter of fact, they never are aware of it, and this, probably, explains why they keep at it. Take my brother-in-law, for instance. He has a marvelous family for turning up at inconvenient moments. If we are going to have company to dinner we can surely count on a message from him asking whether it would be convenient for his wife and himself to drop in on us. If I am anticipating a quiet hour of reading in the evening it is ten to one that I hear his voice in the hall. Just as I am listening to close up my office in the afternoon he is sure to come in and establish himself for a prolonged talk. Take a hint? Such men never take a hint. They are so obtuse that they don't see when their presence turns everyone into a crowd. They have not learned the art of effacing themselves on occasions, and they never will. You feel sorry for them at first, but soon grow from chagrin to another sentiment."

HAD NO CAUSE TO BE AFRAID.

Very Harmless "Tiger" Was Irishman's Companion in Cage.

The manager of a wild animal show in Westminster was in the dumps because the only lion in his collection. After trying in vain to evolve the lion he finally secured an Irishman to appear in his exhibition on all fours in the lion's cage, wrapped in the dead lion's skin. This plan worked well enough for a while, and the public was fooled. One night, however, it became necessary, in the course of our performance, for the lion to enter the tiger's cage. He pleaded strenuously behind the scenes against being sent into the other menagerie's occupant, but his employer was unyielding, assuring him repeatedly that the tiger was harmless. The lion ventured into the cage, but, at the loud and vigorous persuasion, at last crawled into the tiger's cage. No sooner was he in the cage than he took what little courage he had left, and it was down on all fours in a hoarse whisper, "It 'ears don't bite me; I ain't no lion; I'm an Irishman." The tiger appeared to be perfectly disinterested, and in a moment he growled back, "Shut up, you fool, or we'll all be taken away."

FREAK PLAYS IN ROYAL GAME

Records on Golf Grounds Very Much Out of the Ordinary.

On one occasion a player handicapped himself to the extent of playing his six shots with one big head on and the only crumb of satisfaction that some people can get out of the story is that the man missed nearly every shot and lost his wager. Also, who has not heard of men trying to play with one eye covered up, others who have had but one club against the full set used by their opponents, and others who have agreed to pay who have had but one club against the opponent's golfer played a round with a champagne bottle against a man who had all his clubs, and it is a sad thing to know that it is on record that the man with the champagne bottle won? There are said to be various ways of hitting a golf ball, but it is not generally known that men have driven balls off the tees of expensive watches with out at the same time driving the face off the watches, and an American variation of this form of golf, fresh enough, is practiced with much success on one occasion, was to drive a ball off the top of a hen's egg, which had been dented at one end to make it hold the ball, but not otherwise damaged.

CALLED FOR SLIGHT SEVERITY.

Indian Viceroy Departed from His Policy of Kindness.

Lord Lawrence, one of the famous viceroys of India, was an able and very singular man. He used to do his work in his shirt sleeves, and discouraged as much as possible all state and ceremony. He was inclined to treat the natives like children, although he was a strict disciplinarian upon their meetings and receiving justice and kindness. Lord Mayo seemed to succeed him, and on the last afternoon before Lord Lawrence was to leave on leave he took the incoming viceroy for a drive. On the way he expressed his doubts of Mayo being very sanguinarily and solemnly on his successor." Lord Mayo thanked him for his helpful advice, and they returned in due course to the government house. The sun of footman was slow and awkward in opening the door of the carriage, whereupon Lord Lawrence jumped out in temper and gave his car an unmistakable tug. Lord Mayo turned to the viceroy's aid with a smile, "My first practical lesson, sir, in the exercise of authority unhesitatingly in an old one," he whispered.

Effect of Relaxation.

Dr. Long Manhattan Young of Chicago, says: "Sleeping in the open air, sleeping on the front is good, says the New York Press. But to conclude by to his own mind an expert on relaxation. The lay opinion, he says, "the want of relaxation is the principal cause of insomnia. To produce relaxation we must first equalize the circulation of the blood. This is very often accomplished by sleeping with the head up, which throws the blood into the lumbar region. The position is rather tiresome (I should say so) and on stretching out the legs sensation and therefore relaxation takes place. For insomnia supervening upon overwork I would advise taking some good, long bruises. When due to want of control of the thinking mechanism one finds or four almost insane item costs a pound), which will waste up the stomach and transfer the previous energy to the solar plexus, or stomach brain."

Nurses Dread Lightning.

Of all people who are glad when the weather is unseasonably hot, none are more thankful than professional nurses. "It isn't that we are afraid of lightning exactly," said a hospital nurse, "but it has a mental effect on our patients. Most sick people have an surrounding fear of lightning in case of extreme weakness or nervousness a dozen flashes of blinding lightning relieve—for the patient is such a state of prostration that it takes extraordinary effects on the part of a nurse to bring him around. If one nurse person requires all their energy to keep a patient from fainting, the time the predicament of the nurse who has a whole ward full of them on her hands."

Horn Long Imbedded in Tree.

A ram's horn that was imbedded in a tree 183 years ago is a curiosity that Janson Elder, a forester ranger, living at Pelsley, Ore., has discovered. While running in the woods in 1838 Elder came across a yellow pine tree in the base of which was imbedded the horn of a mountain sheep. He did not then have time to make a thorough investigation, but since he became a forest ranger he has occasion to go to cut down the tree. He took a section of the trunk containing the horn to Lakeview. The horn was a little to one side the center of the tree. It was not curled as are the horns of mountain sheep generally, but was almost straight. Counting the rings of growth, the tree was shown to be 232 years old. Outside of the horn were 183 rings, indicating the number of years that had elapsed since the mountain sheep was caught and held fast by the yellow pine. The horn was coated with pitch. It is ten inches in diameter at the base and 20 inches long.

Invention as a Business.

Commenting on a recent article whose writer bemoaned the fact that genius does not take up inventing as a business, the London Saturday Review (London) says: "We doubt whether inventing is the highest human aim but it is a business to be learned by anybody. Inventors are born, not made. Our country is full of people who, by divine inspiration, if we are to judge by the number of patents applied for, a different conclusion might be arrived at? It is a sure way to fame and fortune. America appears to be the specific breeding ground of the inventor. The difficulties of getting the ears in that fortunate land appears to have produced a kind of sagacity, which alone is capable of creating such diabolical inventions as the cash register and the automatic telephone exchange."

Felt at Home.

The former section had been accustomed to street car traverses. To do the wrong thing at the wrong moment is the inevitable. Hence, at the end of the year he repaired to the tenement. The new section was a concord one, and from the very first gave intense satisfaction. His mornings were as well as a cat's; doors were never slammed, nor did he open windows with a bang. "Where did that man receive his training?" asked the chief engineer one evening while attending a meeting of the trustees. "In the Pullman service," grunted a member who was hating the hay fever, "where he was taught to have a regard for the comfort of the sleepers."

James Russell Lowell on Reading.

Have you ever rightly considered the amazing quality of real music? That it is the key that unlocks to us the whole world of thought and feeling, that it can take the company of age and assist of the wisest and the best? Can you think of any other moment? That it enables us to see with the lovers of every land, with the finest ears, and listen to the sweetest voices of all time?—James Russell Lowell.

Probably Not.

An actor who had made a laughable failure in a part from which he had hoped for great success, said to a friend inquiring: "I'm going out why the thing didn't work. Wasn't my acting good?" "Well—ah—" stammered the other, who was in a very embarrassing plight, "good is not the word."

Got His Pay Quickly.

Elias Beeman got pay Monday morning early; committed assault and battery on the person of R. S. Shapton soon after breakfast, was arrested at ten which plead guilty in justice Collins' court at noon, and at three o'clock the same afternoon he was on his way to the Detroit House of correction for thirty days.

Beeman had worked for Shapton since last summer, and had received his pay to date, less about three dollars, which was not disputed by Shapton.

Beeman met Shapton on the street, and demanded his pay. Shapton told him he would pay him in the afternoon. Beeman then violently assaulted Shapton, pounding his face up badly.

Death of Mrs. Wm. Cooper.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cooper, wife of Wm. Cooper Sr., died suddenly at her home in this city Sunday afternoon, of heart failure, after a lingering illness of several months.

Deceased was born in Dublin, Ireland, 75 years ago, coming to Canada when quite young. She was married in Canada, coming to this county soon after, locating in Kent Co. Mich.

They came to Charlevoix county in 1880, locating on the Marion farm where they lived until quite recently, when they moved to Boyne.

Mrs. Cooper is survived by her husband. She was the mother of seven children, six of whom are living—Oliver and William Jr., of Charlevoix, James, of Detroit; Mrs. A. C. Freeman, of Boon, Mich; Mrs. Geo. W. Bennan and Mrs. Minnie Cooper.

She was a most estimable lady, well known in this city, and respected by all. Her character and temperament drew to her many sincere, loving friends, and all knew of her quiet, loyal devotion to her family, and her patient care of them in their behalf. The family have the sympathy of this community.

Resolution.

Whereas, the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, has been pleased to remove from our midst, our worthy and beloved brother, Byron W. Hiller, And, Whereas, Brother Hiller has been for many years, a respected and worthy member of Charlevoix Lodge No. 292, F. & A. M., as well as a good citizen of this community.

Therefore, Resolved, That while we deplore the unfitually demise of our brother, and feel that he was removed at the time of his greatest usefulness to his family, to the lodge of which he was a valued member and the community at large, yet we submit with grace to the decree of our Grand Master, and bow from our brother's sudden call, that it is necessary for each and all of us to be ready for the summons that may be extended to us at any moment.

Resolved, That this lodge extends its heartfelt sympathy to the family and friends of one deceased brother, with the hope that the sudden blow may be softened as much as possible to them, and that they may be enabled to bear the affliction with fortitude.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Lodge and a copy thereof be presented to the family of our brother, and published in the city papers.

Common Council.

At the Monday night meeting of the council the clerk was instructed to insure the old water works building and contents on lake front.

Also to present the board of public works a list of all its arrears for water or light, with instructions to collect or shut off service.

COURT HOUSE BEING REBUILT.

The Board of Supervisors Order the Work Begun at Once.

Saturday morning the board of Supervisors executed a contract with Robert Jones, of Charlevoix, for the reconstruction of the court house, recently damaged by fire, and the work is now well under way with a good force of men.

The contract calls for a roof like the old one, except that it shall go to a point in the center instead of to a deck, and the elimination of the towers.

A new chimney is to be erected on the outside, and the ceilings on both floors renewed with metal. The contract calls for the completion of the work March first.

Previous to the execution of the contract the City of Charlevoix executed to the county a clear title to deed of the property, and it was duly recorded. The court house is now owned by the county "in fee simple."

Mr. James has no doubt of his ability to complete the building in the time specified.

SUGAR BEETS PAY.

What East Jordan Farmers Say About the Profit of That Crop.

From the East Jordan Enterprise

We wish to call your attention to some facts concerning our crops of sugar beets this year and what we got out of them. Abe Stevenson got sell of four and three-fourths acres of beets $43.00 after deducting $13.25 for seed and fertilizer. It cost us to raise them including everything from fitting the land to hauling $48.25; the leaves me $42.47 per acre clear profit after paying me for all my labor. This was not a very good year for the beets and I have learn knowledge of the business was at once recognized and he was for a time continued in the same capacity. His promotion to manager soon followed, and during his supervision of the Booth interests in this section, he has been intrusted with several very important matters outside this immediate territory. He has been sent to the Whiting country, and two years ago he was 10 weeks in Zon. Twenty-one months on business of equal importance. His integrity of character and honorable business methods have created an enviable standing with the fishermen throughout the territory over which he has supervision.

This is a most important acquisition to the industrial and business interests of Charlevoix. It will enhance the value of our already large commercial fishing activities, and concentrate here the interests in Northern Michigan of the great Booth Co.

KNOWLES NAILS LIE.

The Charlevoix County Delegate Punctures Story of Attempted Bribe.

Charging that corporations have been endeavoring to defeat the initiative principle by offering positions to attorneys and other members of the constitutional convention, Delegate A. L. Moore of Oakland caused a sensation in the convention convention one day last week, during the three days debate on that question.

Moore declared in his speech that corporation interests, and especially the liquor element, have been exercising their utmost endeavors to kill the proposition which provides for the initiative on constitutional amendments upon a petition of 8 per cent of the voters.

He said that Delegate Knowles of the Charlevoix district had informed him that he had been offered a position by the lumber company now doing organized forestry in Lower Michigan. Delegate Knowles answered Moore by declaring that the proposition made him attorney for the surety company was made before the constitutional convention was called or he was a candidate for delegate.

The company is one of veracity between the two members. The man who is alleged to have made the offer to Knowles is Representative A. J. Hunting of Lestanse, who succeeded in getting through the last legislature a law providing that liquor dealers may take out surety company bonds in Michigan companies only. No companies of this class exist in the state, but Hunting is organizing one which he says will be ready for business in March.

A BOOTH & CO.

The Northern Michigan Headquarters of the Great Fish Concern to Be Removed From Petoskey to Charlevoix.

The SENTINEL is permitted to make the announcement that the headquarters of the A. Booth Packing Co. will, the coming spring, be removed from Petoskey to Charlevoix and considerably enlarged in its capacity.

These have been in process of formulation for several months involving this change, but certain features in the deal rendered it undesirable to make the public announcement. But now it may be set down as a fact that the Northern Michigan branch of that great corporation will soon be at Charlevoix. The reasons for this change are obvious. Charlevoix is the most central point from which to direct operations in the large field covered by the Booth interests, and the ease of navigation is much longer than at any other point in the territory.

The Booth Co. some weeks ago leased the Round Lake frontage known as the Donnelly property. In the early spring they will erect thereon an ice house, packing house freezer and office building.

The fishery which will be managed from the Charlevoix base will embrace Petoskey, Cheboygan, Mackinaw City, Detour, Scotts' Point and Northwest the last three on the north shore. Mackinaw City will be the only branch distributing point. Five men will be employed in the Charlevoix office.

This change has been brought about under the efficient foresight of Mr. Olof Nordrum, who is the Northern Michigan manager, who is to become a citizen of Charlevoix under this change, and upon which Charlevoix is to be congratulated. Mr. Nordrum began as an accountant with H. Considine & Sons Petoskey, when that firm operated in fish. Upon the absorption of this concern by the Booth Co. Mr. Nordrum's ability and knowledge of the business was at once recognized and he was for a time continued in the same capacity. His promotion to manager soon followed, and during his supervision of the Booth interests in this section, he has been intrusted with several very important matters outside this immediate territory. He has been sent to the Whiting country, and two years ago he was 10 weeks in Zon. Twenty-one months on business of equal importance. His integrity of character and honorable business methods have created an enviable standing with the fishermen throughout the territory over which he has supervision.

This is a most important acquisition to the industrial and business interests of Charlevoix. It will enhance the value of our already large commercial fishing activities, and concentrate here the interests in Northern Michigan of the great Booth Co.

Resolution.

Whereas, the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, has been pleased to remove from our midst, our worthy and beloved brother, Byron W. Hiller, And, Whereas, Brother Hiller has been for many years, a respected and worthy member of Charlevoix Lodge No. 292, F. & A. M., as well as a good citizen of this community.

Therefore, Resolved, That while we deplore the unfitually demise of our brother, and feel that he was removed at the time of his greatest usefulness to his family, to the lodge of which he was a valued member and the community at large, yet we submit with grace to the decree of our Grand Master, and bow from our brother's sudden call, that it is necessary for each and all of us to be ready for the summons that may be extended to us at any moment.

Resolved, That this lodge extends its heartfelt sympathy to the family and friends of one deceased brother, with the hope that the sudden blow may be softened as much as possible to them, and that they may be enabled to bear the affliction with fortitude.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Lodge and a copy thereof be presented to the family of our brother, and published in the city papers.

In Berlin, Germany, they water the streets from the electric tramcars. On these watering cars reservoirs have been added to the platforms, and these reservoirs are emptied as the car runs by means of perforated tubes placed fan-shape at the front and back of the car.

No Country for Tobacco Users.

In Abyssinia it is considered a crime to smoke. The law forbidding tobacco was so firm intended to prevent priests from smoking in church; but it was taken too literally, and now no civil officers have to be careful not to be seen smoking.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER III—(Continued.)

"You're wrong, Hewson," said Major Clutterbuck cheerily. "Why, mark that mines are always engaged. They are looked upon as the safest men in the city."

"But may he not be off the line and somewhere else? When I saw him last, I thought he was going to Madeira, and what I am I say."

"And the last time I saw you I told you that you knew more than an idiot about the business with them."

"I have said I know, and I say what I say," the other repeated.

"And you won't tell us where you got this of the Girdlestones?"

"It would not be good for you. It is enough that what I say is correct. Let it suffice that they are engaged, and that I heard it not under people all that they know about anything whatever."

"Why, you talking like a regular old fogey," said the junior partner, who was a young man of the latest London stripe, they had sought in vain for some cigarettes. Hewson was the fresh-faced, clean-shaven type of young fellow, a fine strong sound of twelve hundred long, and the other was the Honorary Star, somewhat smaller in size, but much pleased of it at Uxbridge. The former cost twenty-two thousand pounds, and the latter seventeen thousand. The Major Girdlestone had always had a weakness for pretty nephews, and in his lonelinessness determined not to interfere his new vessels. If the crew and tuns, for which he had paid heavy premiums for so many years, were to be in the ultimate profit, and with no disaster, surely these new pieces of flippery were fair. Clutterbuck, however, by strange luck that the Honorary Star was steaming to Uxbridge to defend fig on Saturday, and the Hewson voyage, she ran right into the Dreadnoughs, which had sailed the best of all the Liverpool tuns for third outward prize. The Dreadnoughs was a total wreck, and sank within five minutes, taking down the Honorary Star with her, and the Evening Star was so much damaged about the bows that she had to be docked for a sinking and stiffing. That day's work sent the Mersey firm somewhere about thirty thousand pounds.

Other ships had occurred to weaken the firm, apart from their trade with the coast. The Girdlestones had always had the reputation without the knowledge of his son, and the result was that, in Brum. One of the grounds the mines in which he had sunk a large sum of money, but which had brought him a handsome return, because nobody exhausted, and the mine was worth a zero. No firm could stand annual such a run of bad luck, and the Airlina trading company ended before it. John Girdlestone, and the stock fell a well pit of dirt to his son. As claims arose he sadded that it, in the best manner he could, and postponed the inevitable day when he should have to give a true account of their financial position. He hoped against hope that the Dreadnoughts Star or the arrival of some airlines carrying from the coast might set the concern on its legs again.

Hewson to day he had been expecting news of one of his vessels, and was morning he found a telegram awaiting him at the office. He tore it eagerly open for it bore the Madeira address, and was from his agent, Jose Alexandre, and announced that the voyage from Madeira had taped so much he'd been a total failure. The cargo was hardly sufficient to defray the working expenses. As the merchant read it, he sank disorder over the table and he groaned aloud. Another of the poor schooners which his fleet owns had snapped beneath him.

"There were three letters lying beside the telegram. He glanced through them, but there was no comfort in any of them. He was from a bank manager informing him that his account was under overdrawn. Another from Lloyd's Insurance Agency, pointing out that the premium on two of his vessels had been unless paid within a certain date. The goods were gathering very thickly over the African firm, yet the old man bore up against misfortune with therefore courage. He sat alone in his little room, his head leaning upon his hands, and his thatched eyebrows drawn down over them. He was from a bank manager, informing him that he had come when he spent a fortnight in the Isle of Wight. Mr. Hewson

GRANGE AND THE PRESS.

An Ohio Idea That Might Well Be Adopted in Other States.

(Special Correspondence.)

About two months ago the publishers of the O. Grange-News of Canton, O., decided that the grange organizations of the county ought to be represented, and well represented, in the local newspaper. Suiting the action to the idea, the publishers set apart two pages to be used each week by the grange organizations in telling of the doings of the farmers in the promotion of knowledge and culture and, if they chose, in preaching the principles of the grange. The publisher suggested that each subordinate grange in the county should appoint a grange correspondent to represent his respective organization in the double page grange department. The Pomona Grange of the county and the fourteen subordinate granges accepted the proposition. The result has been that the double page in the Grange-News has been issued every week with timely and exceptionally well-prepared grange news. Each subordinate grange has its regular column or two, and each takes pride in being well represented in my week. To heighten the interest of the grangers in this work the publishers offer three handsome prizes to the three granges that should during a period of eight weeks provide the most, and most newsiest matter for the grange department. The liveliest interest was shown in the contest. The result is that the grange, heretofore almost thought of and little known in the county, has received so great an advertisement that it has grown and is now one of the most powerful, if not the most powerful, organization in the county.

An enthusiastic grange spirit has been developed, and the people of the city of Canton have taken a greater interest in the affairs of the farm. All of this looked to prepare for a most hospitable reception there for the Ohio State Grange, which met at Canton during the second week in December. And the proprietors of the papers have proposed to the grangers that they leave the plow for a day and take possession of the editorial rooms of the paper for one issue to give the farmer point of view as to "how the farmer would edit a whole newspaper." The Pomona grange of the county accepted this proposition, elected a corps of grange reporters and a farmer editor in chief and announced its readiness to take charge of the sanctum sanctorum for one edition.

OHIOAN.

NEW HAMPSHIRE GRANGE.

There Are 29,206 Members of the Grange in the Granite State and $25,816 in the Treasury.

New Hampshire state grange convened this year at Manchester. The secretary's report showed the total membership in 252 active granges on Oct. 1, 1897, 13,687 men and 14,509 women, making a total of 28,206. There are nineteen Pomona granges, with a membership of 2,252. The treasurer reported resources of the grange at $25,816.03. The discussion over taxation reform was earnest, and the state grange went on record in opposing more taxation upon farms. As a farmer who would represent the agricultural class on the new state tax commission, H. O. Hadley was re-elected master for the third term after a spirited contest with Charles Bartlett, overseer. C. C. Yeaton of Dover and B. C. Woodman of Plaistow were elected to the executive committee. The grange went on record as not in sympathy with the warfare against corporations so long as they operate along legitimate lines. On the other hand, it demanded that corporations shall keep within bounds, and it asked for such legislation as shall be necessary to effect justice and equity. It demanded that the farming interests be not unfairly burdened and that railroads give no undue advantage to any section in market competition. The grange indorsed the parcels post scheme of Postmaster General Meyer; also postal savings banks.

The lecturer's conference was attended by the subordinate lecturers, and many helpful suggestions for the year's work were made. The subordinate granges in the state will be asked to discuss the subject, "The Business Articles by the Warrent For Town Meetings" at the meeting next preceding town meeting. In April the grange was asked to discuss the subject, "Practical Forestry for Farmers." In May the subject of Labor will be "Should our Towns Appropriate Money to Advertising its Natural Advantages?" In September, "Should the State Grange Have a Permanent Home?" This idea of subordinate granges discussing one subject on a given day when most timely is a good one.

National Grange Gavel.

The gavel used by National Master Batchelder when presiding over the meeting of the national grange has a history. It was made from cigar and cherry wood taken across the plains in 1857 by an A. Team. When the national grange met in Portland, Ore., three years ago Judge Boise, now deceased, presented it to Hon. Aaron Jones, who was then the national master. In a beautiful and eloquent speech Judge Boise gave its history and presented it in the name of the Oregon state grange. It was accepted by Mr. Jones in an equally eloquent speech, and the incident created great enthusiasm. The gavel has a solid gold band properly engraved. This gavel is one of the treasures of the national grange.

A grange was recently organized at Williamsville, Vt., with sixty-two charter members. The union is in the Green Mountain State is prospering.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE GRANGE

One of Largest Meetings Ever Held Assembled at West Chester.

In his annual address to the Patrons of Pennsylvania state grange Master W. H. Hill said, among other things, that he had never seen the Order so strong in so many different counties as today and he never before had presided at a meeting of the state grange when it had so large a membership. Much of this increase is due to the rally work of the grange at fairs, field meetings and picnics, but not a little to the systematic organization work in the subordinates. Speaking of the grange land bership, of the grange in Pennsylvania is now something over 150,000 strong. Strong resolutions were adopted against the sale of oleomargarine colored with coal tar dyes and asking the governor to favor the enactment of a law which would provide for the office of food commissioner with power to enforce the law against adulterated butter, renovated butter, oleo and butterine. It was thought the uniform law should be changed that it would not be necessary to prove that the yellow coloring of oleo was due to a foreign substance, and finally the special committee of the state grange was asked to co-operate with other organizations with a view to repealing from the statutes of the state all of that big tangle in the tax surtax law. On the subject of taxation the grange demanded equalization of taxes and asked the support of all farmers and real estate owners without regard to party.

The report of the agricultural committee recommended the grange to exert its influence to prepare and equip the young people on the farms for their citizenship responsibility. Another resolution against the creation of new offices and increasing the salary of state officials in the state was adopted, as was one another favoring a law by which bank deposits may be guaranteed by the national government and the government to be reimbursed by a small tax upon the banks. The portion taken by Postmaster General Meyer regarding postal savings banks and the parcels post was commended. A protest was revolted against the manifests which has removed from our roles the motto "In God We Trust." Another resolution favored equal suffrage. A recommendation that three lectures be adopted as the state flower for Pennsylvania prevailed. The grange received local option on the temperance question.

PACKAGES BY MAIL.

"What Can I Do to Help Along a Parcels Post System?"

The above question, says the Rural New Yorker, is coming to every mind from kingdom of the postage stamp wins its way to spell some big letters. It will do the need good. Now, a drop of ink here and another there will do good—in fact, it will do harm by leaving a lot of sandy loam. We must put our drops all together if we expect them to eat in. The present parcels post system is a bastard child of a parcels post system. For general Colbert he would increase the size of the merchandise package from four pounds to eleven and reduce the rate per pound from 16 cents to 12. But if a package is mailed by a patron of a certain delivery route to a customer on the same route he would have the rate made 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound up to eleven, making a charge of 27 cents to mail a package of 11 pounds, mean weights allowed to be carried. This would reverse the argument advanced by country merchants that under a parcels post the great mail order houses would ruin them. They can mail a package to one of their town customers for 25 cents which from a distance would cost $1.32. Now, we advise all friends of postal reform to get together lack of this simple plan. It is not all we can do and will deserve, but it is more than we can get by scattering our forces. Get this and let us prove that it will pay, and it will pay. Get right after your congressman with that in up of his.

Maryland State Grange.

Baltimore sweetness I the Maryland state grange this year. State Master J. Patterson was re-elected. The Pomona certainly in very active hands. A class of sixty took the sixth degree. Resolutions favoring an annual appropriation by the state of $5,000 for the experiment station were adopted, and the recommendations of the national grange generally were approved.

Some of the members of the Massachusetts state grange want to start a scheme for establishing a grange store through the state, but the majority did not relish the matter was referred to a committee.

The Connecticut state grange will meet at Hartford on Jan. 14-16.

BAY STATE GRANGE

Membership Over 23,000—State Master Richardson Re-elected.

Fitchfield, Mass., established the annual session of the Massachusetts state grange this year, and it proved to be a worthy host. Lieutenant Governor Draper represented the state at the public reception and the mayor of this city delivered the address of welcome. Hosea B. Ayers, the grange secretary, read the fifty first annual report showing 1,196 the past year and now numbers 23,400 in 212 subordinate granges. Treasurer reported $8,665.72 in the treasury. In his annual address Master Richardson said that the agricultural conditions are assuming more complex and serious aspects, so that a more complete form of co-operation in order to obtain and hold what belongs to the rights of the farmer. While the Order is not a business organization, yet it shows greater emphasis on co-operation, but not to neglect the educational efforts of the social side of the farmer's life. There is a general demand for legislation which will prevent combinations which enlarge are throwing around the subject of education, a demand for more study of those subjects most directly pertaining to the farm interest. We farm, and in that kind of school work best adapted to fit the pupil to live a higher and better life.

Concerning taxation Mr. Richardson recommended that the grange assist in relieving from their almost standing on the problem and invest them with power to carry forward an investigation in the different methods of taxation in other states. Concerning the resolutions adopted were: This would reverse the argument advanced by country merchants that under a parcels post the great mail order houses would ruin them. They can mail a package to one of their town customers for 25 cents which from a distance would cost $1.32. Now, we advise all friends of postal reform to get together lack of this simple plan. It is not all we can do and will deserve, but it is more than we can get by scattering our forces. Get this and let us prove that it will pay, and it will pay. Get right after your congressman with that in up of his.

A Splendid Tribute.

The Philadelphia North American says editorially that the grange is far ahead of any other body of citizens in Pennsylvania. Not a single public reform or legislation has been effected which did not first and separately and otherwise to this organization. Their organization is a power known and recognized.

A new grange national bank has been built at Perry, Pa., of gray pressed brick. It will be a two story structure 32 by 60 feet. Pennsylvania seems to have a monopoly on grange banks.

The largest charter membership of any association ever organized in round years is 170. Milford, Mass., holds the honor in this respect. The grange was organized Dec. 3 by State Deputy Herrick.

VERMONT STATE GRANGE.

Dedication of Morrill Hall of the University of Vermont.

The fifty-sixth annual session of the Vermont state grange was held at Burlington this year. The secretary's report showed that the total membership of the grange in the state was 9,000 strong. Thirty four granges had been organized with 1,500 members during the year. There are fifteen Pomona granges in the state. The total receipts of the secretary's office 1,35 year amounted to $4,0[illegible]8. The treasurer's report showed a total of $9,0[illegible]3 to the credit of the grange. State Master G. W. Pierce remarked in his address that there was a healthy growth in the membership throughout the state, with every reason to be a universal feeling that the agricultural class could not afford to remain out of the order after recognizing all the grange has accomplished for the farmer in social, educational and business life. He urged the introduction of the study of agriculture in public schools. He said that there should be an effort to secure from every grange in the state, that the work might be given the widest publicity. The grange stands for honest legislation and knows should interest themselves more in public affairs. A special feature of interest at this meeting was the dedication of Morrill hall, a gift of the state to the agricultural department of the University of Vermont. The state legislature gave $50,000 for the building to the grange. National Master Jonathan Chase, Master Pierce, Professor L. H. Bailey and others spoke on the occasion. G. W. Pierce presided.

A long list of resolutions was adopted. The parcels post system was condemned; a better law dealing with trusts and trusts; and more efficient legislation for checking the exportation of cattle from this state to Canada for, and the teaching of agriculture and manual training in the public schools was strongly favored.

GRANGE AS SOCIAL ORDER.

A Query Well Answered by a Series of Pertinent Questions.

Occasionally the question of "Grange or the grange certain essential of the community who are not desirable acting it comes up for discussion. Some believe object to the introduction of social features, and consequently oppose the measures. Some are opposed to the introduction of social features and others are ready to accept what they may, with the understanding that slower in the social sense the grange is not for members."—Mrs. W. C. Newton.

Your question is no odd as the grange, as the church, as society, as government and as the human family, says the New Jersey Farmer. As outside observers we can hardly be expected to know the qualifications of the members of the grange. We can only suppose that all the members of the community must be interested by you, whether they are desirable or undesirable. Possibly, as you say, some of them are not "desirable socially," but if you permit them to serve will make them desirable or valuable socially will not your grange be the gainer? They do the best they know how. If you make them to know that you will be able to do better. Once inside your grange and in contact with you, will not the unsoundness of their social ideas become less unsound? Will not their best manners be one of the balances and be replaced gradually by the better manners of your better selves? Will they then? Will and their awkward speech be improved by hearing more refined speech? Will not these men and women "shown by the world" not be improved by your social influence? Will they not be better for your grange? Cannot you impart something of grace, refinement, intelligence and social representation to them without being a lot of your own good qualities? Cannot the grange be made a powerful social influence, educator and renovator? So long as a single tenant or blind worker in your grange needs or desires to improve himself or herself by entering your grange, shall you have done your full duty until you have extended the grange hand to his or her?

This Farmer Breeds Buffaloes.

"Buffaloes exterminated? Not a bit of it," says Blake Master G. D. Richardson of Massachusetts. He is the owner of Indian Rock farm in West Brookfield, and he is not only an industrious farmer but a breeder and dealer in buffaloes, moose, elk, deer, wild geese, ducks and a score of other things that run or fly. He has shipped buffaloes and all other wild game to Russia, Germany, France, Australia and New Zealand. These animals are for city parks, on lands also that is fast growing in all cities. No city park is now complete without a zoo, be it large or small. To supply these to the business of Mr. Richardson, he says that the buffalo is far from being extinct outside of the Yellowstone and Corbin parks. He breeds them, but he cannot raise them. They are natural wild animals and must be caught to secure specimens. Mr. Richardson also is a breeder of Jersey cattle and Shropshire sheep.

The Thankful Heart.

A cheerful heart is not the only evidence of a good parent of all other virtues.—Cicero.

GRANGE AND FARM LABOR.

Shall Foreigners Be Imported to Work Our Farms?

No question will come before the next meeting of the national grange of more vital importance than that of the importation of foreign laborers for our farms. It is claimed by some of the opponents of immigration that the grange has the power to prevent the importation of foreign labor. Some are for employed so far farmers and immigration societies are organized. The opinion from India were reported on the good results from importing foreign laborers in Oh. Grange. The delegate from Oregon did not what to have the grange go on record as antagonizing labor unions and deplored any attempt to encourage foreign labor. He was ably supported in this views by the delegate from California, who said it was better to let the grass rot on the ground than to import cheaper and other economical ways to be tried. The delegate from West Virginia was no less outspoken against the policy of employing foreigners on our farms. The delegate from Pennsylvania did not think there was anything to fear. He believed that these foreigners would flock together and would not stay on the farms. The delegate from Vermont regarded the question as ridiculous, as the free pick of immigrant labor and thrown on the farmer should have an equal chance to do the same. The opinion of the Connecticut was that the subject was amended so as not to encourage the importation of foreign labor and adopted the following: "I do not to allow less wages, diffuse the value of the labor of the farm and the value of the farm, or the subject of this charter whose their interests are identical, and the farmer and the grange, which covers the whole ground, and is a direct tribute to the investment of all such questions.

NEW YORK HONORED.

The Empire State Master Holds important Position.

It is a very unusual thing in the grange to see a distinguished grange officer in a new member an important office the first year he is with us, but this honor was accorded Frank N. Godfrey, master of the New York state grange. It is a very unusual thing in the national grange for a new member to be placed on the executive committee of the national grange, but this was made the chairman of that committee. A Hartford correspondent of the Rural New Yorker says of the session of the national grange: "The national grange adopted Master Ireland's report, which showed that the Order is in a very prosperous condition. The discussion of the report of the committee on legislation was prolonged and earnest, and the action taken was not satisfactory to the Master, who had recommended that the grange should be represented before congress by a lobbyist. The committee on legislation, however, reported against the proposition, and the report was adopted. Master Ireland's recommendation

DIE IN HOSPITAL FIRE

Three Inmates of San Francisco Institution Burn to Death.

Three persons met their lives in a fire which destroyed one of the buildings of the Pacific hospital in San Francisco. The main hospital building, which held many patients, was for a time seriously threatened. There were about twenty-five patients, but they were removed as fast as possible to safety, and no lives of any of the dead were the wife of Michael Flynn, who with her husband was employed as a janitor in the hospital, and two patients, one a man and one a woman, whose names are not known. The building was a landmark for the eastern power plant of the hospital. The fire is believed to have started through a defective flue. The loss was more than $30,000, on the building.

TEMPERANCE WAVE.

The Country Being Swept By It. Michigan Next.

The Detroit News, one of the most influential newspapers in the state of Michigan and in fact one of the most prominent in the northwestern states is devoting a great deal of attention to the antisaloon movement which is spreading over the country and has made special arrangements for articles from the centers of each district where the prohibition movement is being stayed. Other influential papers throughout the country are taking the same course as the Evening News and that which is being advocated by The Evening Record. In a column of yesterday, the Evening News says:

"What is probably the greatest temperance wave in the history of the United States is now sweeping over the country. Starting more than a quarter of a century ago in Kansas and Maine, the two original prohibition states, the anti liquor movement has now traveled from end to end of the nation. On the first of the year, southern states which have been 'wet' since the days of the earliest colonists, went dry. Georgia going completely to prohibition on Jan. 1. At the same time, 97 per cent of the territory of Kentucky, the home of bourbon and rye sour mix, forcing prohibition on 1,500,000 of the state's population of 2,250,000. After the first wave of 1907 Alabama will be totally dry. And so on throughout the country.

"Anti-saloon people are working in every state in the union, and are meeting with success. The reform wave is being felt in the 'wettest' localities in the 'wettest' states. Not all the wealth of the combined liquor interests has been enough to stop the movement thus far. In Kentucky alone, more than $10,000,000 was invested in distilleries, yet the liquor cause lost the greater part of that state to put a ban on the sale of liquor.

"Liquor men are organizing to meet the issue, and as a result are advocating strict compliance with existing laws, in hopes to prevent their being made more stringent."

Passed the I. S. R.

The concern, even on Friday, by a vote of 19 to 5, after three days debate, passed on first reading an initiative and referendum proposition.

In the shape in which it was passed, it provides that 20 per cent of the voters may initiate a constitutional amendment.

The proposed amendment shall be submitted to the legislature. If rejected by the legislature, the secretary of state must submit it.

It is very gratifying to know that the delegate from Charlevoix County opposed this measure, with special reference to the initiative.

The "initiative," as embodied in this action, is not so much as the "referendum" and becomes a constitutional provision, will be a most potent instrument in the hands of unscrupulous politicians. It is no less than political and legal degeneracy.

We would not insult the intelligence and honesty of any Michigan community by an explanation of our belief. The man who runs may read. We submit, that there is not a county in Michigan in which the signatures of one-fifth of the voters thereof cannot be secured for any old proposition, none predatory in no sanctification, or from free trade to free lunch. Of course it is but the initiative; but it is building up an innocuous foundation, and is fraught with danger.

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS.

Excellent skating on the bay at present.

The tug Violet has gone into winter quarters.

The harbor tugs were closed Monday of this week for the season.

M. J. McDaniel's new residence is about completed, and he expects to move in next week.

The tug Mallam made three attempts to break through the ice in the harbor but without success.

Henry Gothere received word that his mother was dangerously ill at Two Rivers, Wis. He left for the above city on Tuesdays boat.

Mrs. C. C. Gallagher who has been under doctors care in Chicago the past three or four weeks returned home much improved in health.

The village is putting on city airs lately, by the establishment of a "Gang" and the location of another Hotel. All we need now to complete the list is an undertaker.

Three pretty weddings crowned here last week in which Catherine Cull was united in marriage to Wm. J. Malloy and Catherine and Rose Allars to James H. and Arthur J. Gallagher. The latter was a double wedding. The money strengency has no terrors for the above young people.

The Boys' Club will meet with Ernest and Warren Kibbis Friday evening, Jan. 24th.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church was held Tuesday evening, the 14th inst. Rev. Mr. Hall served a beautiful supper, giving a feast that was enjoyed by not less than one hundred and seventy-five people. Following this was a social hour with music. Soon after seven o'clock the business meeting was called to order and excellent reports were presented from the different departments of the church work for the past year. The reports showed the church in excellent condition. The membership has increased, over eighteen hundred dollars was been raised for current expenses and benevolences, and the parsonage debt has been reduced three hundred dollars. John Thomas and A. M. Bostick were re-elected trustees. A. T. Bennett was chosen deacon, and Mrs. A. T. Bennett, Mrs. John Nicholls, Mrs. John Harris, and Mrs. Frank Harris were elected as deaconesses. Mrs. Harris was re-elected Clerk and A. F. Bridge was re-elected Sunday school Superintendent. The meeting was the twenty fifth annual meeting of the church, and was one of the best annual gatherings in its history.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

East Jordan Herald: The East Jordan Electric Light & Power Co. are building an addition to their plant power house and next week will install a 150 horse power Corliss engine. Since the carrying away of their dam the Electric Light people have been giving us good service, even though they have had to contend with an old engine.

The Wexford county board of supervisors lately without a dissenting vote passed a resolution which will cause the question of local option to be submitted to the voters of the county at the April election. This action was the result of the presentation of a monster petition signed by 1,700 voters of the county to the board, only 783 signatures being necessary.

Mrs. Lana Moffatt, 65, was found dead in bed at Traverse City Sunday morning by her daughter Emma, who made her home with her mother. Mrs. Moffatt retired in her usual good health Saturday night. Heart failure was the cause of death. Mrs. Moffatt was the widow of the late Seth C. Moffatt, congressman from the eleventh district of Michigan, who died in Washington 20 years ago while in office. Besides her daughter one son, Orla C. former state senator, and five grandchildren survive.

Petoskey News: D. H. Herrington quietly passed away yesterday afternoon at his home, "Summit Farm," near Clarion, about 3 o'clock, the ending of a life whose later years were long ones. For the last couple of years he has practically been an invalid, his condition gradually getting worse as the time went on. He was 94 years old at the time of his death, having been born on Feb. 19, 1813. He was a veteran of the civil war in which he served his country ably and well. Mr. Herrington was the father of six children, all of whom are living at present.

Traverse City Record: The last twelve days, every passenger train on this division of the Pere Marquette has reached its terminal station on time. This record began Dec. 29 and since then there has been quite a wide variety of weather, including snow and wind storms and other things that usually operate against trains running on time. But despite this all the trains on this division have been on time. In some instances, twice a few minutes late have would reach Petoskey or Grand Rapids on time, the latters being so small that it was made up despite the fact that the schedules are pretty well shortened up.

To be almost 100 years old and absolutely contented! That surely is a wonderful thing, yet "Uncle Dan" Wilpole of Traverse City, says that he is, and although his position is probably unique in the world, he has no ancien hear him out. "Uncle Dan" recently had his pension increased to $20 a month and this feeds, clothes and keeps him comfortably, while it also permits him to enjoy as much tobacco as he wants. In all questions, "Uncle Dan's" answer is that he desires nothing more on earth and that he fears neither fires, floods, panics or disasters, as Uncle Sam is his banker. Uncle Dan was a hunter and trapper for years and still has the weapon of his prowess, though he uses them little now.

Traverse City Record: The executive committee of the Lincoln club promises one of the best banquets and programs which the Grand Traverse Lincoln club has yet held at the meeting to be held in this city on the evening of Feb. 11. The club has the promise of the attendance of the chairman of the republican national committee, Harry S. New, of Indianapolis, and it is also expected that Congressman Townsend will be present and other speakers from the national capital will also be in attendance. In addition, Congressman G. J. Diekema, chairman of the state central committee, H. A. Mosselman, of Grand Rapids, and other men of prominence will be in attendance. C. A. Palmer, of Manistee, president of the state league of republican clubs, will act as toastmaster, who has a state reputation in that capacity.

East Jordan Herald: Our towns people were shocked Thursday afternoon to hear that Phil L. Lanway had suddenly passed away. His heart had been troubling him most of the winter and on Wednesday afternoon he said to his father that he would go home and go to bed as he was not feeling very well. Thursday morning his wife secured some medicine and later Dr. Dickey was summoned. The doctor found Mr. Lanway suffering from a touch of bronchitis and his heart action was good. Within an hour after the physician had seen the patient, and while Mrs. Lanway was absent from the room, leaving a little girl in charge, Mr. Lanway passed away. Just what caused his death will probably never be known. The funeral services have been arranged for Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock to be conducted by Elder Dudley at the saints' church, with interment in the Jones cemetery. Phillip L. Lanway was fifty years of age the 20th day of last September. He was a son of Jos. H. Lanway, the best old hard ware dealer, and was born in St. Lawrence County, New York. He came to East Jordan with his parents some 40 years ago and has been identified with East Jordan's business interests for years. He conducted a grocery store on the west side for a number of years, has held the offices of township clerk and justice of the peace at different times, was at the time of his death a notary public and conveyancer. He leaves besides a father and wife, two children to mourn his loss together with four brothers—Silas J. of this place, Wm. H. of Traverse City, Jacob M. and Joseph Lee of Seattle, Wash.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

"Now, supposing I published the senior partner, with a snubby on his thigh lips 'Out, arch a report go about. Suppose, too, that we were at this time, when the market was in a depressed condition, to have spread thousand pounds in three-per-cent. Consols of my alleged discovery turned out to be entirely unfounded, of course the value of the shares which we held would go up quite quickly, and we might very well sell out for double or treble the sum that we invested. Do you see the sequence of events?

"There seems to me to be rather too much of the suppose in it," remarked Flora. "How do we know that such events will get about, and if they do, how do we know that they will have any effect to be founded?"

"How are we to know?" the merchant retort, wriggling his long legs backwards and forwards. "Why, my dear, we shall have every reason to believe that they will be founded. I, Peter Malkin, I say. You see there are some brains in the old man yet."

Flora looked at her father in small-eyed surprise and some indignation. "Why," he exclaimed, "it's dishonest. I'm sure that he is a most honest man."

"Dishonest, Flora?" The merchant stopped his dance. "Dishonest? Why, it's commercial finesse. Where is trace in it? I should like to know. I haven't worked out all the details—I want your co-operation over that—but here's a rough sketch of my idea. We send a man you can depend upon to some distant part of the world, Buenos Ayres, for example, or the Feejee Mountains. It doesn't matter where, as long as it is out of the way. On arriving at this place our agent starts a report that he has found a great diamond mine. We should even go to the length, if he considers it necessary, of hiding a few rough stones in the earth, which he can be to give colour to his story. Of course the local press would be full of this. We might present one of the diamonds to the editor of the newspaper. Then we would have a full and exhaustive description of the new diamond fields would find its way into London and Paris. Of course, I'll answer for it that the immediate effect is a great rise in the price of stones. We should have a second agent at Cape Diamond Jobbers, and he would buy up everything at high, big in all that he could while the news lasted. Then, the original agent would ground to be all a mistake, the price naturally go up once more, and we'd be long figure for all that we had. Eh? Is what I mean by making a good old manoeuvre? There is no room in it for any indentation."

"It sounds very nice," his son remarked, thoughtfully, "but it is more like the Stock Exchange than anything else."

"It must work well. As far as human calculation can go there is no possibility of failure. Hoddes, my boy, never lose sight of the fact that we shall be speculating with other people's money. We ourselves have nothing to lose, absolutely nothing."

"I am not likely to lose sight of it," said Ezra sourly, his mind coming back to his grievance.

"I reckon that we can raise from forty to fifty thousand pounds without any difficulty. My name is, as you know, as good as that of any firm in the city. For nearly forty years it has been above par, or negotiable. If we carry out our plans at once, and lay this money out advantageously, all may yet right."

"It's Hobson's choice," the young man remarked.

"Hobson's choice, Hoddes? What do you mean? Have you chosen the right sort of men for agents? I hope you have, for it is very misleading to act such fake jobs as these. They would have more weight than."

John Girdlestone shook his head decisively. "Not in this case, Ezra. I have considered the matter in such a piece of business as this."

"Nothing easier," answered Ezra with a cynical laugh. "I could pick out a dozen disappointed fellows from the clubs who would be only too glad to earn a hundred or two in any way you can mention. I shall go myself to the City immediately. I know, or, rather, agent, I have the very man, Major Tobias Chirtley. He is a shrewd, unscrupulous fellow, and he's always hard up. His social rank would be a great help to our plan. I'll answer for his jumping at the idea."

"Sound him on the subject, then."

"I will."

"I am glad," said the old merchant, "that you and I have had this conversation, Ezra. The fact of my having speculated without your knowledge, and deceived you by a false report, has not shown herself much upon my conscience. I am sure you will be a relief to me to have told you all."

"Drop the subject, then, Ezra said, coarsely. "I must go and see to it. I have no redress. The thing is done and nothing can undo it, but I confess that you have selfishly wanted the money."

"Selfishness, my dear, I have tried to be best. The good name of our firm is everything to me. I have spent my whole life in building it up, and if the day should come when I shall have to hide my head in shame from my myself. There is nothing which I would not do to prevent it."

"If you they want your premiums," Ezra said, glancing at the open letter upon the table. "There is it that none of these ships go down? That would give us help."

"Hush! hush! John Girdlestone cried, hospitably. "Speak in a manner which you talk of good things."

"I can't understand you," said Ezra, petulantly. "You persistently over-insure your ships, and they never sink. Look at Lloyd's! It is put at more than twice what the ships are worth, and they do not sink. I dare say, is about the hour. Never mind, I'm sorry to evade only these, while your two new uninsured clippers run such great risks."

"What, what, what, man? Do? replied the merchant. "They are safe enough. I have done nothing for them for years. Sooner or later they must go. I wanted to do my best."

"I'd make me a good quick enough," Ezra muttered with an oath. "Why don't you make old Hippo boil a hole in them? I'd do it for you for a fiver."

"Ezra, Ezra!" the old man cried, horrified at the idea.

"Well, what's the harm? It's only one of my boys, or, rather, four cabs. Every insurance makes in the money. Hippo's a good hand at the job. I'd give him a fiver myself."

"Ezra, Ezra!" the old man cried, in a tone of deep reproach, "I am sorry to hear you talk of such a thing. Hippo is a good man, and I trust to be able to do for him in his old age, but I should be sorry indeed if I thought that he would allow the sacrifice of his honour for my sake. I trust that you have spoken in jest, Ezra."

"Jest, eh! I don't know what I meant, but I know that I'm sick of being a cipher in this place, and that I'm tired of being spoken to like a boy before my clerks. I'm a man, I tell you, and I'm sick of being treated as a boy."

"Hoddes, my boy, you must not give way to your passions in this way. Let us be gentle with Ezra. The fact of his being speculated without your knowledge, and deceived you by a false report, has not shown herself much upon my conscience. I am sure you will be a relief to me to have told you all."

"Drop the subject, then, Ezra said, roughly. "I must go and see to it. I have no redress. The thing is done and nothing can undo it, but I confess that you have selfishly wanted the money."

"Hoddes, my boy, I have tried to do best. The good name of our firm is everything to me. I have spent my whole life in building it up, and if the day should come when I should have to hide my head in shame from myself. There is nothing which I would not do to prevent it."

Probate Order.

State of Michigan, The Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.

At a session of said Court, held at the Probate Office in the City of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 7th day of January, A. D. 1908.

Present, Hon. John M. Dyarm Judge of Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of Dominick Gallagher, Deceased.

Ellen O Donnell having filed in said court her petition praying that the administration of said estate be granted to herself or to some other suitable person.

It is Ordered, That the 3rd day of February A. D. 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at said Probate Office be appointed for hearing said petition, and that all persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said court, then to be holden at the Probate Office, in the City of Charlevoix, in said County, and show cause why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted: and it is further ordered that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sun, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county.

JOHN M. HARRIS, Judge of Probate.

Mortgage Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage made and executed by Hiram H. Olney and Lucien E. Olney, to William Bell, of Charlevoix, Michigan, dated the 1st day of March in office of Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, duty entered, 1899, in liber 1 of mortgages on page 1 and 2 and on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars and ninety-five cents principal and forty-five cents for taxes paid by the mortgagee, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage on the date of this notice is the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars and ninety-five cents principal and forty-five cents for taxes paid by the mortgagee, and no suit or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover the money secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in the mortgage of the statutes made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, at the Probate Office in the City of Charlevoix, in said county of Charlevoix, Michigan, on the 4th day of January, A. D. 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at the place at which said premises are mortgaged to satisfy said mortgage debt, to all that certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the County of Charlevoix, State of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Commencing twenty-eight rods north of the southeast corner of section twenty-one, town thirty-four north, range eight west, thence north one rod, thence west twelve rods to center of Lake, thence south one rod, thence east twelve rods to the place of beginning, in the west half of the southeast quarter of section 21, township thirty-four north of range eight west.

On Ridicule.

Of this we may be sure, that ridicule falls on the unfavorable point of a cause, and finds out the weak side of an argument, if there be any; resort to it sometimes tells too much on its success, those who are chiefly accustomed to it almost always are so with reason, and cannot be too much on their guard against deserving it.—William Hazlitt.

Fashion in Medicine.

A curious communication has been made to the French Academy of Medicine by Dr. Grimbert, who has a fondness for statistics. The doctor has been making inquiries with a view to finding out whether there is a fashion in medicine. He has discovered that the fashioned medicines, such as opium, hellebore, bella and benoth, are sold in about the same quantities as they have always been. The sale of leeches has diminished. In 1876 50,000 were sold by a certain number of chemists' shops in Paris, but this year the same shops sold only 12,000. The glycero-phosphates and antiseptics sold 50 per cent. less than they used to and quinine has gone down 24 per cent. As for the newer drugs—antipyrin, aspirin, etc—their sale has increased enormously.

Would Manage Finances.

"I might just as well throw money away at once as to lend it to you," she said to the artist as he came in and began to smoke a cigarette. "You pay me in dribbles, and I am so short of money I can anything back that I lent you a month ago. Why, only a few days ago, when you got paid for a water color and stopped me on the street and gave me back two dollars of those nine dollars you borrowed. Well, I just went along spending that money foolishly for things I didn't need at all, I was so rich, you see, and felt it back again." "Yes you little darling," he said as he softly tiffed her, "I'm just good money foolishly like that again."

Dissipated Men of Genius.

"There is an implacable side, light thrown on the life of W. E. Henley and his youthful followers, by Mr. Ed. Gosse, in his novelist. He defended in the London Academy the memory of the late Ernest Dowson, who died of under consumption, found those both morphine and absinthe. 'Under immediate ken,' adds Mr. Gosse, 'without was a literary fashion, set by Baudelaire. It was an appetising habit, which some of the younger men of letters followed with a kind of fatal enthusiasm instead. I have seen three of the finest minds I have known drown in whisky.'"

Motherly Vexation.

"Oh, it hurt!" exclaimed Mrs. Lapsling. "You've worn out some shoes yet, and I was there for one pair last year or we had our last equinoctoria sinus!"

Volcanic Ash Cement.

A recent author of a Napoleon Bonaparte describes it as unusual work from volcanic ashes, which is attracting much about and experiment. The ashes are made cement, and are said to be almost as effective as the cement, which is two are used together with gravel to substitute lacrymal, nasal sugar, as they have always been. The soil of leeches has diminished. In 1876 50,000 were sold by a certain number of chemists' shops in Paris, but this year the same shops sold only 12,000. The glycero-phosphates and antiseptics sold 50 per cent. less than they used to and quinine has gone down 24 per cent. As for the newer drugs—antipyrin, aspirin, etc—their sale has increased enormously.

International Courtesy.

An exceptionally pretty girl, with an English face prominent on her chin, was stand on to a chair on the plea watching the racing. On a chair beside were two French ladies, the fairer round and red in French—"I hope I do not obstruct your view." "Mademoiselle," spoke regard one of the men, "I made prefer the situation to the view." Cap the ex-pale cousins given a free hour of courtesy from that!—The Tatler.

Worse and Worse.

A convict in a German prison had been extremely refractory. One morning the jailer had been tried, and big round brick his spirit. One morning for the governor said to the warder: "I say, Hubert, the air indeed is having worse than ever. I'm him on hand and water." "But he is already dollar two, that days, sir." "Then give him a wooden bucket instead. We must break his spirit somehow."—Illustrated Bits.

Simple and Logical.

A teacher observed when he thought a lack of patriotic enthusiasm in one of the boys under his instruction. "Now, Tommy," said he, "tell us what you think if you saw the stars and stripes waving over the fort of Gibraltar." "I should think," was the logical reply of Tommy, "that the wind was blowing."

Information.

The visitor to New York was in search of information. "Do you know anything about the copper colored?" he asked his host. "No," was the reply, "but I know the extract course."

Same Pair.

"Yes," said the passenger from farmer, "I've had these trousers on my back for ten years."—Harvard Lampoon.

World's Oldest Republics.

So far as practical considerations go Switzerland is the oldest of surviving republics. Two pure republics, however, long antedate the Helvetic confederation and to strict accuracy one of these two must be the oldest people of all now in existence. One of these is the republic of San Marino, on Mount Titano, the oldest state in Europe and one of the smallest in the world. The other is the republic of Andorra in the Pyrenees mountains, between the Christians. No fixed date can be assigned to each of these, both are traditional rather than written may be historical even before the middle ages began.

Woes of the Druggist.

"If you want to meet the limit of misery," remarked a druggist, "just keep a drug store. Most people recall to think the place is for public accommodation, without the necessity of any real patronage on their part. We have had a good many merry weeks, but use the other day experience. It was raining hard and a woman we didn't know, who lives three blocks away, telephoned us to send her two two-cent postage stamps."

Why Letters Are Unwritten.

Why do people not write more frequently? Letters are conscientiously as the for the pantry? asks a writer. Perhaps the reason is that a letter without sugar, salt or soap, yet because letters are unanswered for lack of a good jam, a stamp or an envelope? It is not the expense, nor lack of thought, that keeps an insufficient or meager supply of the necessary articles on hand.

Dignity of Ownership.

"I saw a sign in a restaurant at Galion the other day," said a Chicago land man, "that struck me as an effective means of upholding the dignity of the establishment. The proprietor of the restaurant is a big man, weighing about 200 pounds and put up like a prize ox. His sign says: 'If You Want to Know Who Runs This Place Ask Me. Signed, Something.'"—Clevelan Plain Dealer.

Yawned at Unfortunate Time.

Charles Beecher, of Philadelphia, yawned just as a collision of a street car occurred, and a piece of glass was down his throat. Physicians say he may lose his speech.

TO VACATE CUBA EARLY IN 1900.

Secretary Taft Says Pledge Made by America Must Be Kept.

As far as he can, Secretary Taft has committed the American government to a promise to withdraw completely from Cuba in the spring of 1900, this pledge being contained in a letter from the War Secretary to the President concerning the report of the Cuban Census for the past year. After declaring that the report from the Governor shows the condition in Cuba to be encouraging, Secretary Taft says: "It was hoped to come into the census night be completed in September last. I did not think so, and I am not surprised to learn that the census has not yet been completed and probably will not be until April or May. This will postpone the best elections until June, the presidential election until December and the installation of the President and Congress and the turning over of the island until about March or April of 1900. This is in compliance with our promise when we assumed temporary control of Cuba, and it seems to me that we ought to allow nothing to interfere with our full promise."

STATION ANNEX BURNED.

Kansas City Visited by Fire Causing Quarter of Million Dollars Loss.

The Union station annex in Kansas City, Kan., adjoining the Union depot railway station, was destroyed by fire early Monday. The station contains offices of the Santa Fe's landmarks, was one of the buildings which escaped injury by the tornado after a large part of the city had been swept. Among the occupants of the building are the receiving offices of the Adams, Wells Fargo and Pacific Express companies, the waiting rooms of the metropolitan, the offices of the Kansas City Electric Light Company, the Pullman Palace Car Company's ticket office and the Burlington, Missouri & C. A. rooms. The loss is estimated at $250,000. The fire started at 4 o'clock from crossed electric light wires over the registry department of the mailing room.

SHAFT TO BENNINGTON VICTIMS

Sailors, Soldiers and Citizens Attend Unveiling of Monument.

The monument in memory of the sailors who lost their lives in the explosion of the United States ship Bennington was unveiled in San Diego, Cal., Tuesday, on the National cemetery on top of Point Loma. Thousands, including the officers and sailors of the Pacific squadron and citizens of San Diego and other California cities, gathered to witness the ceremony. The plain shaft stands within the plot where are buried the dead of those who perished in the disaster of July 21, 1905, and is composed of seventy-four shafts of San Diego County granite roughly dressed and towering six by four above the concrete base, capped by a pyramid of polished granite. The national cemetery is almost at the top of the promontory and the monument looks in one direction on one side the Pacific and in the other over the waters of the bay. The principal parts were made by Admiral Goodrich, commandant at the navy yard, who was commander of the Pacific squadron at the time of the accident on the Bennington. Wm. Admiral Goodrich finished the unveiling took place, conducted by the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, at which time had been draped over the two tablets on the face of the monument.

IMMIGRATION IS PARALYZED.

Arrival of Foreigners in New York Shows Heavy Decrease.

Because of the heavy falling off in immigration which has reduced fresh recruitments to the government employees at Ellis Island, New York, which has been kept busy for many years, plans are for a more or less sweeping reduction in force. Only one ship came from the Commissioner of Immigration Watchorn says that will undoubtedly be a reduction in the force if the decline in immigration continues. There are about 700 government employees of various classes at the immigrant receiving station on the island. Instead of the 5,000 or more immigrants daily arriving there last year, there have been instead of the 5,000 or more immigrants daily arriving this year, the average now is about 1,000 a day.

STRANGE MALADY GRIPS CITY.

Thousands of People at Lansing, Mich., Stricken at Night.

From some unknown cause Lansing, Mich., was seized with a strange malady last Thursday during the night, thousands being suddenly stricken with extreme nausea, accompanied by acute intestinal trouble. Most physicians attributed the malady to unsanitary conditions. Food poisoning was mentioned as a possible cause, the foremen rolls for physicians were stricken. Two boys were found lying in the street, too ill to walk. Hundreds of the teachers and hundreds of pupils were absent from school. All the stores were closed for the day. Outside of the waterworks none of the disease was prevalent or in any other sections, so the water supply is not under suspicion.

OWNERS SEEK AID.

Operators Ask Geological Survey to Make Thorough Investigation.

Appealed by the recent mine disaster in Fairmont, the operators of mines in the West Virginia Mining Association has appealed to the government for aid in the prevention of the trouble. Resolutions were adopted urging legislation enabling the geological survey to survey the causes of the recent mine explosion and supply remedies found necessary. The resolutions set forth that the operators cannot account for many of the disasters in mines, that the law is not regulated mines, and that the technical personnel should be increased at the earliest immediately. The operators pledged themselves to contribute to the fund to search along this line assuming to be thirty right and ten thousand dollars.

LOSES LIFE IN ROUNDHOUSE FIRE

Man Burned to Death at Elkhart, Ind.—Risks Amounts to $140,000.

Eighteen of the fifty stalls of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern passenger and freight roundhouse in Elkhart, Ind., with the big machine shop and oil house burned last Tuesday morning, the fire that started at 3 o'clock Thursday morning. Only one man was killed in the wooden of these was burned. Wilson, who lived in Elkhart, and who had charge of the tool room, was burned to death. Alone in the room he was also overcome from the oil room. The loss will be $140,000. The fire was due to an explosion of paint.

LONG OCEAN WAR IS ENDED

German Lines Driven to Union by Kaiser's Fast Boats.

The Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd steamship lines have buried the hatchet after a battle for transatlantic supremacy lasting from the time the steamship Deutschland captured the speed pennant from the Cunard line, about seven years ago. The Deutschland holds the record for crossing the Atlantic between New York and Plymouth in less time than any other ship. The North German Lloyd steamship Kaiser Wilhelm II. claims the record between Sandy Hook and Plymouth. That is the way the situation between the rival lines stood when the Cunard line, with the Marconi and Lusitania, knocked out all speed and line records. The White Star line, after unveiling half of its fleet from the Queenstown and Liverpool service to the Southampton, Plymouth, and Cherbourg route, naturally came into direct competition with the German ships, taking away much of the patronage the Hamburg and North German Lloyd lines had monopolized practically for years. The German companies have entered into a four-year agreement covering the American, Mediterranean and far eastern trade. In its terms the Hamburg-American line receives its proportion of the monopoly of the east and limits itself to the carrying of 1,000,000 of the 1,500,000 tons to be carried by the North German Lloyd company a greater share in American steamship and immigration traffic.

GREAT LAKES CHART

New Edition Has Just Been Issued and Are for Sale.

The United States Lake Survey has just issued a second edition of one chart of the Great Lakes region. It is printed in five colors on a scale of 19 miles to the inch, and is intended for the use of navigation. The chart is big enough to show the whole lake system from Duluth and Chicago to Montreal, and the sheet, 32 inches by 45 inches, is small enough to fit in a sailor's chart case.

These charts are sold by the Lake Survey office, Old Custom House, Detroit, at the cost of the paper and press work, as required by act of congress. The first edition of the complete chart of September 1895, was so rapidly exhausted that it did not meet all the demands that have been printed. The latest edition sells at reducing the cost from six cents to 15 cents per copy. Orders usually are not received as payment.

Here are some of the features making it valuable for navigation and other purposes:

Primary sailing courses, with distances, are shown for all the lakes.

Water areas with 6 fathoms or more are blue, all shallower than 6 fathoms are white, with the 18, 36, 60 and 100 fathoms of 3 shades of blue to show contour lines. All land areas are in buff tint.

Lines showing the compass variations over the whole region are printed in red. Places where there is a local magnetic disturbance are conspicuously marked.

Curves are given showing the lowest and highest monthly mean height of the water in each of the lakes from 1860 to 1896.

Tables are incorporated giving lengths, terminal points, and locks with their dimensions, of the United States and Canadian canals tributary to the Great Lakes.

Tables of dry docks on the lakes with dimensions are given.

Approach views of cities and towns bordering the lakes are initialed by varied symbols and graded scales of lettering.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Central Lake Torch: Mrs. Dennis Vorhes and son Harold accompanied by Mrs. Ben Vorhes of Charlevoix left Tuesday morning for an extended visit at her old home in Ellenburg, New York.

Petoskey faces the crisis of losing its leading industry, the Blackmer Rotary Pump Co. Unless the city puts up $12,000 the company will move as it has several offers. The city will be asked to bond.

John and Dan Nichols, of Silver Lake, and two brother-in-laws, Will Davison and Harry Andrews, of Fresh Lake, recently went hunting at Beaver Creek. They were there just a week but they brought back six deer, 15 rabbits and 20 pounds of pike.

When a wave of popular enthusiasm strikes a town, it is either a mighty good thing or a town on the bum. In the case of Evans City the former is true. In the last month the town has gone wild over indoor ash baseball, a game, as we understand it, now played in Cuba, and now there are eight indoor basketball teams and a regular indoor baseball league, while indoor football is gaining ground rapidly.

Traverse City Record: Mrs. Libbie Livingston, of Acme, who has been visiting at Northport and Suttons Bay, returned home this afternoon. Mrs. Livingston had a very nice trip to Northport, leaving her home behind Acme last Tuesday afternoon and reaching the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Kennedy, six miles north of Northport, in just two hours and five minutes, a distance of 21 miles, the trip having been made in an automobile.

East Jordan Enterprise: James A. Shay, an eccentric character who lived by himself in the west part of this township, near Intermediate Lake was found to have died at his home on Sunday last. There being no one with him when he died Prosecuting Attorney Clink directed superintendent Dodge, acting as coroner, and Dr. A. Sawyer to investigate. There was no marks of violence and their report was that he died of heart disease. A little over $400 was found on his person and he owns a valuable farm. He has one daughter, Mrs. Geo. Brown, of Antrim county. He was a few days over 70 years of age, and was a pensioner.

Traverse City Eagle: Wilbur R. Campbell of Northport is in the city today in the interests of the Great Lakes fishermen, of whom there are about 1000 in this state. Mr. Campbell states that about 50 fishermen make their living by fishing in Northport alone, and with the great money in herring and whitefish, and the regular and well-established markets for them all united for mutual benefit. Among other things they have gone proposed legislation which they feel will be of great benefit to the fishermen. The proposed legislation is the outcome of a conference held in Northport last week, at which there were about 100 fishermen present.

An Ordinance

Relative to Saloons and Saloon Keepers.

THE CITY OF CHARLEVOIX, ORDAINS:

Section I.

No person shall keep a saloon or place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or shall sell intoxicating liquors, without first obtaining from the Common Council a license therefor in the manner hereinafter prescribed.

Section II.

All saloons where intoxicating liquors are sold must be closed at 11 o'clock p. m. every evening but Sunday, and remain closed and locked from 11 o'clock p. m. every evening to 6 o'clock a. m. the next morning, and no person shall be allowed to drink or be served with any drink of any description while such saloon is closed and locked as aforesaid.

Section III.

There shall be no screen, curtain or other obstruction in any saloon to prevent a clear view of the interior of the same from the street or the room of the City of Charlevoix.

Section IV.

Any person, partnership or corporation desiring to keep a saloon where intoxicating liquors are sold shall make a written application to the Common Council, which application shall be filed with the City Clerk, and shall contain the name of the applicant, if a person, and if a partnership, the names of all the members thereof, and if a corporation, the names of its officers, and the place where such saloon is to be located, and shall be accompanied by a bond in the sum of $500, signed by two sureties, who shall be freeholders in the City of Charlevoix, conditioned that such applicant shall not violate any of the provisions of this ordinance, nor any other ordinance of the City of Charlevoix, nor any law of the State of Michigan relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors. Such application and bond shall be referred to the Committee on Ordinances, who shall report thereon at the next meeting of the Common Council thereafter. If the Committee report in favor of such application and bond, the Common Council may grant a license to such applicant, which license shall be signed by the Mayor and countersigned by the City Clerk, and shall contain the name of the applicant, if a person, and if a partnership, the names of all the members thereof, and if a corporation, the names of its officers, and the place where such saloon is to be located, and shall be numbered in the order in which it is issued, and shall be conspicuously posted in such saloon.

Section V.

The license fee to be paid for such license shall be $500 per annum, payable in quarterly installments, one-fourth thereof on the first day of January, April, July and October, in each and every year, and no license shall be issued for a less sum than for a full year, except when the application for such license shall be made after the first day of April, in which case the license fee shall be $250 for the balance of the year.

Section VI.

After the application for a license shall have been granted, and the license issued thereon, the City Clerk shall cause to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a notice that such license has been issued, stating the name of the person, or the names of the members of the partnership, or the names of the officers of the corporation, and the place where such saloon is to be located, and the amount of the license fee paid therefor, and that the same will be issued to the applicant named therein, if no remonstrance be filed with the City Clerk within ten days after the date of the first publication of such notice, which shall have been published for the space of ten days, and if such remonstrance be filed within said time, the license shall be issued for a less sum than for a full year, and the license fee shall be paid to the City Treasurer.

Section VII.

Every saloon shall be in the rear of the City of Charlevoix, and shall be located on all sides with other buildings, and shall be closed on all sides from the street and from the other saloons, except a door in the rear of the saloon, which door shall be closed and locked from the hour of eleven o'clock in the afternoon of each and every day during the remainder of the day and night, except on Sunday, when it shall be closed and locked from the hour of eleven o'clock in the afternoon to the hour of six o'clock in the morning of the next day, and shall be closed and locked on the days when the hours are same by the hour of the day or night, except on Sunday, when it shall be closed and locked as aforesaid.

Section VIII.

All saloons, restaurants, cafes, or places where liquors are sold, or places which sell liquors, shall have a door in the rear, which door shall be closed and locked from the hour of eleven o'clock in the afternoon of each day to the hour of six o'clock in the morning of the next day, except on Sunday, when it shall be closed and locked as aforesaid, and no person shall be allowed to drink or be served with any drink of any description while such saloon is closed and locked as aforesaid.

Section IX.

Any person, partnership or corporation desiring to keep a saloon where intoxicating liquors are sold shall have a license for such business, and shall be a person of good moral character, and shall not be a habitual drunkard.

Section X.

Any person violating any of the provisions of this ordinance shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding Fifty Dollars, together with the costs of prosecution, or by imprisonment in the County Jail not exceeding three months, or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the Court.

Section XI.

This ordinance shall take effect twenty days from the date of its passage.

Approved and adopted this 20th day of January, A. D. 1896.

OSCAR E. WILBUR,
President pro tem. and acting Mayor.
HENRY C. COOPER, City Clerk.

An Ordinance.

An ordinance requiring persons confined for drunkenness to work on the streets of the city, or money paid to be used and for hard labor in lieu of hiring the employment of such prisoners.

Section 1

The marshal in charge of the jail of the City of Charlevoix, or the street commissioner of said city, shall have the power to employ persons confined in said jail for drunkenness or other offenses, or persons for the violation of any of the ordinances of said city, to work on the streets, which shall be in progress such and such portions of the streets of said city, and such persons so employed shall be entitled to credit on their fines and costs for such work, at the rate of two dollars per day for each day so employed, and such persons so employed shall be under the control of said marshal or street commissioner, and shall pay all their expenses incurred while so employed, and such persons so employed for any violation of the provisions of this ordinance, or any other ordinance of said city, or of any violation of the laws of the state of Michigan, or any other state, and shall subsist on such food as said marshal or street commissioner shall deem sufficient for the support of such prisoner, and such persons so employed shall be entitled to credit on their fines and costs for such work, at the rate of two dollars per day for each day so employed, and such persons so employed shall be under the control of said marshal or said street commissioner, and shall pay all their expenses incurred while so employed, and such persons so employed for any violation of the provisions of this ordinance, or any other ordinance of said city, or of any violation of the laws of the state of Michigan, or any other state, and shall subsist on such food as said marshal or said

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER VI.

The resolution of the real state of the firm's finances was a terrible blow to Flora Girdlestone. To a man of the overbearing temperament dissolution failure and poverty seem little things in face of a life life he had reckoned, as a matter of course, that when his father himself away he would be left master of a millionaire, whose halfhour's conversation had alarmed this decision, and left him face to face with ruin.

He seemed to qualify himself as a dealer in diamonds. It happened that he was acquainted with one of the partners of the firm of Finger & Stone, who did the large import trade in precious stones. Through his kindness he received practical instruction in the variety and value of diamonds and learned to detect at three paces the Paris and semiliquid which are only visible to the eye of an expert, and yet are of the highest importance in determining the value of a stone. With such opportunities Kara made rapid progress, and within a few weeks that it were few dealers in the trade who had a better grasp of the subject.

Early one April afternoon the major was strolling down St. James street, frock coated and tall gloved, with gyrbiterm dandy and glittering silver knobbed cane from beneath the dainties of gloves. Young Girdlestone, who had been on the lookout from a club window, ran across and joined his relative.

"How are you, my dear major?" he cried, advancing upon him with outstretched hand and as much cordiality as his nature permitted.

"How do, do, Jack (Top-hat)" said the other somewhat pompously. He had made up his mind that nothing was to be done with the young man, and yet he was reluctant to break entirely with one whose purse was well filled.

"I've been wishing to speak with you for some days, major," said Kara. "I wish to speak to you quietly on a matter of business. Shall we meet me at Schmoll's Cafe at four o'clock? I know the manager, and he will let us have a private room."

"I'd ask you round to my own little place," the major said, "but it's rather too far. Nobody's at home. Hadn't you arm? It was clear to him that some service of a other nature was required of him, and it was obviously his game therefore to hang back and not appear to be too eager to accommodate the young man. Kara, Who he presumed himself at the expense of Nelson's father, the young merchant had been funding and coaxing in his ability years for five and twenty years.

"I'll tell you why I wanted to have a chat with you, major," Kara said, having first opened the door suddenly and glanced out as a precaution against eavesdropping. "I have to be cautious because what I have to say affects the honour of the firm. I wouldn't for the world have anyone hinted that it stood upon a shaky foundation. Now, the thought that it would be very bad if it were to guarantee you two hundred and fifty pounds, which they would increase to three hundred in one contingency, of course, by that we mean complete success, and that we hope to have the pleasure of adding your name."

When the young man had finished, the major stood by with his face in the expansive smile with which he was accustomed to be faced, and his fingers twiddling behind his backwards and forwards.

"Let me be quite sure, my dear young friend," he said, "You wish me to give Cleveland's firm the benefit of my guarantee that in the event I should prove to be wrong I should pay the difference?"

"That is to say, if you think it worth your while."

"Quite so. If I think it worth my while, I am there to provide a certain certain amount money, and on to offer weight to my action by my name. I do happen to be a man of good birth, and do by exhibiting some rough manners which I have acquired in the wilds of Central England."

"Just right, major," Kara said enthusiastically.

"I am then to telegraph or write this to England and get it inserted in the Times?"

"That's as only work." Kara enquiring. "Time vapors we will stay. A report may be either true or false, you understand.

"And by this report than," the major continued, "you mean that the market will be so affected that your father and your firm will be able to pay and sell in a manner that will be profitable to you, but by which you will do either good or of their money."

"You have an unpleasant way of putting it," said Kara with a forced laugh "but you have the idea right. Dealing with a man who is so well," roared the old softer, finding parole with irritation. "I've an idea that if I was twenty years younger I'd see whether you'd fit through that window, Master Girdlestone. I'd have taught you to propose such a scheme to a man with blue blood in his veins, you scoundrel!"

Kara fell back in his chair. He was outwardly composed, but there was a dangerous glitter in his eye, and his face had turned from a healthy olive to a dull yellow tint.

"You won't do it?" he gasped.

"Do it? If you think a man who's worth Her Majesty's another purse for twenty years would dirty his hands with such a trick? I tell ye, I wouldn't do it for the money that ever was coined. Look here, Girdlestone, I'm sorry you, but you don't know me!"

The young merchant sat silently in his chair, with the same bold color upon his face and scowl expression in his eyes as Major Tolles Cheterbock stood at the door of the hotel. Regarding from the corner of his hands upon it, with his eyes concentrated and his scowl grey lips in a leisurely with indignation.

"What right had you to come to me with such a proposal? Who's set up for being a saint, but I've some morals, work as they are, and I mean to stick to them. The day of rules of life has been never to know a blackguard, and, on my word friend, from this day forth you and I go our ways. I'm not a rich man, but you just drop the line somewhere else, I'm not in it."

It struck the pattern at Nelson's well known bookstall as a remarkable thing that their two customers should walk out with such very grave faces and so unsociable a manner.

CHAPTER VII.

There were rejoicings in Philliamore Gardens over the engagement. For the two old people were both heartily fond of their young relative, as they were wont proudly to call her. The physician dinted his face over the idea of having such a son-in-law as Girdlestone. A little reflection, however, showed him that there was nothing to be gained by informing him, while Kara's life, during the time that she was forced to remain under his roof, would be more tolerable if they so he was kept in suspense.

After breakfast one morning, the doctor asked his son to stay with him into the library. "You must do something to Flora," he said, "she is pining for a change at last, frequently.

"Do you want for anything," replied Tom, "and I don't quite see what I am fitted for."

"First of all, what do you think of this?" the doctor asked sleepily, handing a letter over to the young man, who read it, and read as follows:

"Dear Sir—It has come to my knowledge through my son that your boy has abandoned his situation in Cheapside. When he presented himself at the address of Nelson's father the young merchant had been funding and coaxing in his ability years for five and twenty years.

"I'll tell you why I wanted to have a chat with you, major," Kara said, having first opened the door suddenly and glanced out as a precaution against eavesdropping. "I have to be cautious because what I have to say affects the honour of the firm. I wouldn't for the world have anyone hinted that it stood upon a shaky foundation. Now, the thought that it would be very bad if it were to guarantee you two hundred and fifty pounds, which they would increase to three hundred in one contingency, of course, by that we mean complete success, and that we hope to have the pleasure of adding your name."

LIMIT INJUNCTIONS

Secretary Taft Defines Against Ex Parte Injunctions in Labor Disputes.

Beneficial and equitable in Employers to Organize—Address Another Judge in Chicago Today—Letter to President Gompers Federation of Labor Defines Position.

Secretary [illegible] H. Taft, replying to the request of President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, a member of the Taft Publication Board, makes clear his point concerning ex parte injunctions, which have been so effective against labor and enforcers have quite stepped out of the question.

He advocates surrounding the power of injunction with greater safeguards to insure justice to airtight labor-lawyers and expresses anything which would impair the effectiveness of the courts. He favors the enactment of a law clearly defining the rights of citizens, and when injunctions are to issued. He is against temporary injunctions on ex parte statements and would require a hearing on application for injunction within three or four days. When asked by the accused in cases where contempt is charged for violation of court orders, Secretary Taft would have the hearing before another judge than the one issuing the order, declaring: "The appearance of justice is almost as important as the existence of it in the administration of courts." The correspondence between Mr. Lewis and Secretary Taft, as given out by Mr. Lewis, follows:

Mr. Lewis' Letter.

Martins Ferry, O., Jan. 4, 1908.

Hon. William H. Taft, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

Dear Sir—At present the people of our country are much interested in the question of injunctions, and I believe it would be of great benefit to the public if a clear and intelligible by and for the humanity purpose, and in the interest of the public interest in the views of the proposed legislation on injunctions, which could at fact the rights, liberties and welfare of my clients.

[illegible] Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, and the undersigned, representing the order, I take the liberty of respectfully submitting your views upon a question which is an honest, live issue concerning the liberties of our people. I refer to the subject of injunctions, and the use or abuse of them in the working men. You are aware, of course, of many of the abuses which have arisen and been embodied as law in the administration of this special remedy of equity jurisprudence.

Suggests Four Propositions.

You will see from our position and the attitude we take for your consideration, and against the use of injunctions, that we propose four propositions, namely, first, to specialize those which are injunctive or temporary restraining order may issue in other words, confine in specific terms the large discretion which now is left to the judge in issuing such orders. Second, to limit the duration of such temporary restraining orders or injunctions, that it should be found by a court other than the one issuing the temporary or permanent injunction. Third, not for a trial in your method, can upon viewing, I will.

Very respectfully yours,

EDWARD LEWIS,

Secretary Taft's Reply.

War Department,

Washington, D. C., Jan. 4, 1908.

My Dear Sir—I am in receipt of your letter of January 2, inclosing a copy of the order of the Chicago Federation of Labor, but, in view of the time it required to get it, I have not had time to read it, and generally called upon, elsewhere and you have signed the letter of the President of the Federation of Labor, Mr. Gompers, and I have read it with great care and have given it my consideration, and I have also read the letter of Mr. Gompers to you, and I have read

MURDERED; HOME BURNED.

Bodies of Woman and Four Children Found in Ashes Near Mosby, Mont.

News of a frightful crime committed at the Old Bertsch ranch, on the Musselshell, ten miles from Mosby, was received by the sheriff's office in Lewistown, the message being been sent to Flat Valley by relays of riders and telephone to Fort Maginnis. The message says that Mrs. Ritter, a widow, 40 years old, and her four children, the oldest a girl of 15, were murdered at the ranch home and the buildings set on fire with the intention of destroying all evidence of the horrible crime. The house was partially burned and the neighbors were horrified to find the dead bodies of Mrs. Ritter and her four children in the ruins. The bodies of the women and three children were burned to a crisp. The evidences of a murder were very plain. The motive for the crime is not known.

DEATH HALTS NAVY BOXING.

Sailor Is Killed on Cruiser in a Fistic Encounter.

The death of Apprentice 11. H. Hurst of the U. S. S. Cincinnati as the result of injuries received in a boxing bout has caused much talk of the dangers lurking in the sport. There are many powerful men boxing in the navy who are being objected to the sport as practiced in the navy, and several months ago a mutiny threatened to have been in progress. Hurst, a boxing or the favorite sport of the navy, has been practicing for a match with the full approval of the authorities. An occasional accident, usual among men who should not be allowed to interfere with a sport that is on the whole beneficial to the service at large. Apprentice Maynard, who fought with Hurst on the Cincinnati, will be court martialed, but it is not likely he will go over the side in the manner of boxing in the navy.

TWO QUIT JAPANESE CABINET.

Increase in Tax Budget Causes Division in Emperor's Advisers.

The resignation of the entire Japanese cabinet was narrowly averted Tuesday, the premier, Marquis Saionji, tendered his resignation to the Emperor, but his majesty declined to receive it, while the alternative resignations of Yoshiro Sakatani, minister of finance, and of Shinji Yamagata, minister of communications, were accepted. Masahisa Matsuna, minister of justice, will combine the portfolio of finance, and Seitaro, minister of the interior, will combine that of the minister of communication. This leaves the cabinet without any new elements and removes the disputants who have been the disturbing factors for some time past. The cabinet consult gave rise to some heated debates. Yamagata insisted upon the resignation of Sakatani, who is responsible for the budget which will be introduced in the diet, and who is blamed by the cabinet ministers and the public because in 1907 he promised that there would be no increase made in the taxation but would there be any resort to foreign loans in 1908. An investigation of his situation confirmed the cabinet officers and other statesmen that an increase in the taxation or in lieu thereof a foreign loan would be unavoidable.

MASONIC TEMPLE BURNED.

Grand Lodge Sustains $300,000 Loss by Flames that Destroy Hall.

The Masonic Temple, North Charles street, Baltimore, was destroyed by fire. All of the structure above the second floor is a hollow shell. The building owned by the Grand Lodge of Masons, was insured for $300,000, and the contents for $75,000. The first floor was occupied by several stores, all of which were damaged by water. The upper floors were devoted to lodge rooms, all of which were embellished with costly furniture and hard woods, while the walls were decorated in oil colors. Firemen also had to be stationed to interfere such a spot than in the rooms of the lodge of the Masons at large. Apprentice Masonic, John Barclay and Hartford on the Cumberland will be court martialed, but it is not likely he will go over the side in the manner of boxing in the navy.

SECOVERY OF $12,000 IN GEMS.

Woman Gets from Old-Clothes Man Necklace Lost by Carelessness.

Mrs. William D. Little of New York has recovered a $12,000 pearl necklace in a manner little short of miraculous. A fortnight ago Mr. and Mrs. Little went to an opera. In leaving the opera house the necklace, a wedding gift to Mrs. Little from her husband, became unhooked, and, taking it off, she throw it into the pocket of her opera cloak. A day or two later Mrs. Little gave the cloak to her maid, having no further use for it. The maid was being able to wear the cloak, sold it to an establishment where woman rag and old clothes are dealt in. A day or two ago the woman who runs the clothes shop got the cloak out for the purpose of remodeling it. In the pocket she found the string of pearls, and when a jeweler was done said her the value of the necklace she nearly fainted. Consultation of the books of the shop showed the name of one maid from whom the cloak had been purchased and the jewels were returned to Mrs. Little, who had not missed them.

GET DYE FROM GALL STONES.

Large Purchases of Japanese from Chicago Packers Is Explained.

The buying of gall stones by the Japanese from Chicago packers is said by Philadelphia chemists to be for chemical purposes. Dr. I. Isiosho, a native Japanese, said his people were very anxious in securing dyes from gall stones and they are continually experimenting. He believes they have discovered a new green dye, which is being kept a secret. W. M. V. Coplin of the Jefferson hospital said gall stones had no medicinal value, and that the Japanese use the gall stones for the greenish-yellow pigment, a color almost lost by the people. He said no American chemist had ever discovered the method of making this pigment, and the Japanese may have the secret all to themselves. Chicago and other chemists said gall stones contained coloring properties.

LOCKED OUT.

HEALING BY FAITH.

Chicago Reformed Episcopal Church a Great Body as Well as Soul.

A new and important departure has been taken by St. Paul's Reformed Episcopal Church and Chicago, made by Bishop Samuel Fallows, the church has added healing of the body to its spiritual ministrations, following somewhat along the lines pursued by Christian Scientists, although with several fundamental differences. Christian psychology, as explained by Bishop Fallows, does not ignore physicians as does Christian Science, but works hand in hand with the medical profession, and the work of healing undertaken at St. Paul's will be supplied only to such patients as are suffering from disorders in which the action of the mind plays an important part. Cure of organic diseases will not be attempted, although it is believed suffering from both can be aided as far as possible by suggestion faith and persuasion.

The diseases and weaknesses to which Christian psychology is to be applied at St. Paul's are functional nervous disorders, hypochondria, insomnia, nervous dyspepsia, neurasthenia, mental depression, hysteria, neurasthenia, the drug habit, the opium habit, want of self-confidence, irritability, worry, anger, fear and vacancy of will. The class of cases in which no cure will be attempted are those like typhoid fever, scarlet fever, small pox and other diseases of that nature.

Bishop Fallows, who was born in England in 1835, has led an active and militant career. He came to this country in 1858, settling in Wisconsin, and in 1861 was ordained in the Methodist Episcopal church. During the Civil war he served as a colonel and was brevetted brigadier general. He was twice elected to state superintendent of public instruction in Wisconsin and in 1876 helped with the Reformed Episcopal Church, being consecrated bishop the following year. From 1885 he has been rector of St. Paul's church, Chicago. The bishop has other theories besides healing through Christian psychology. He believes that Christianity is a good deal a matter of the kind of food we eat. "If every child was scientifically fed," he says, "we'd have no problem of juvenile delinquency and no spiritual ignorance." His system of Christian healing will be followed with a good deal of interest.

INDUSTRIES ARE REVIVING.

Workers of All Kinds Are Reported in Great Demand.

Business throughout the United States, with commercial and industrial trade, is reviving, according to Tyrone V. Bonnell, chairman of the Industrial Department of the Chicago Association of Commerce. The division of information was created by Congress as an agency to divert immigration from the congested cities, and find places for the unemployed idle. The functions of this division have been enlarged immensely as chief Foudrey is endeavoring to provide work for Americans as well as aliens.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Jan. 11 number 434, against 345 last week, 283 in the first week of 1907, 246 in 1906, 295 in 1905 and 315 in 1904. Failures in Canada this week number 36, against 27 last week and 24 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Review.

BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS.

CHICAGO.

While the situation of production in various industrial branches continues, there are evidences of a very public anxiety for steady improvement to take place soon. With the banks now virtually back to specie payment and discount operations extending, it is not surprising that the volume of business as reflected by bank exchanges, makes the best exhibit in nine weeks, the comparative decline being the lowest in that period.

Following the rains that taken to make necessary repairs to plants, consumption has been general and widely reduced the number of workers made temporarily idle, and the indications now point for the better at the furnaces, mills and forges.

Some substantial advances appear in iron, steel and wire, and fair orders come forward in furniture, housewares, footwear and vehicles. Little change is expected in prices of finished products, but a feeling that some rise may be seen in some extent causing hesitation where much delay is involved.

Weather conditions advanced the January clearance sale of dry goods, which is undergoing satisfactory reduction, and a considerable increase appears in coming buyers attending the wholesale markets for staples, leaving the jobbers, clothing and food products. Measurable collections throughout the West are irregular, some reporting improvement, while others at others the deficits indicate weakness. Failures are reported in the business district of the past week, against 28 last week and 40 a year ago. The total for the month, over $5,000, number 7, against 1 last week and 8 in 1907.—Dun's Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Financial affairs show further and marked improvement, and money is more plentiful and easier to obtain, but the volume of business does not show a still largely nice & sanitized, because business is quiet, and the volume of railway earnings and bank clearings are below a year ago. Nevertheless, the tone is better than a month ago, and industry is quite active in many lines, the larger centers reporting a great number of orders.

In trade lines the general report is one of quiet, but the outlook is still good. Mill work is still a lot to the widest activities in nearly all branches, and the lumber manufacturers are stimulating logging demand by reduction sales. Southern trade shows quite a good deal of business

The head of the mother and three children was burned to a crisp. The evidences of a murder were very plain. The motive for the crime is not known.

DEATH HALTS NAVY BOXING.

Sailor Is Killed on Cruiser in a Friendly Encounter.

The death of Apprentice H. H. Hurt aged 20, U. S. S. Cincinnati, as a result of injuries received in a boxing bout has again brought the subject of boxing in the navy. There are many opponents of boxing in general that have long objected to the sport as practiced in the navy, and on several occasions attempts have been made to stop it. Boxing is the favorite sport in the navy and has been indulged in with the full approval of the authorities. An occasional accident, such as that of Hurt, should be allowed to interfere with a sport that has been so beneficial to the service as a whole. Apprentice Manning, who fought with Hurt on the Cincinnati, will be court-martialed, but it is not likely that any action will be taken in the matter of boxing in the navy.

TWO QUIT JAPANESE CABINET.

Increase in Tax Budget Causes Division in Emperor's Advisers.

The resignation of the entire Japanese cabinet was narrowly averted Tuesday. The premier, Marquis Saionji, tendered his resignation to the Emperor, but his majesty declined to receive it, while the alternative resignations of Yoshiro Sakatani, minister of finance, and of Yashiro Yamagata, minister of communications, were accepted. Masakiko Hanai, minister of justice, will combine that of the minister of communication. This leaves the cabinet without any new elements and remains the disposition was have been the disturbing factors for some time past. The cabinet council came close to some heated debates. Yamagata insisted upon the resignations of Sakatani, who is responsible for the budget which will be introduced in the diet, and who is blamed by the cabinet ministers and the public because in 1907 he promised that there would be no increase made in the taxation now would have be any resort to foreign loans in 1908. CHURCH FIRE A MYSTERY.

Work of Incendiary Seen—Former Chicagoan Pastor of Sanctuary.

It is believed that a fire which nearly destroyed the Second Congregational church of Oakland, Cal., with a loss of $70,000, was the work of an incendiary. The fire started in the rear of the side of the building where the fire broke out. Nothing unusual in the place appeared to have been used in the work. The principal loss was the organ, which had recently been renovated at an expense of $25,000. Many of the leading citizens of the church, which recently celebrated its 50th anniversary, attend the church. Rev. Arthur Harrigan, formerly of Chicago, is pastor of the church.

RECOVERY OF $12,000 IN GEMS.

Woman Gets from Old-Clothes Man Necklace Lost by Carelessness.

Mrs. William D. Little of New York has recovered a $12,000 pearl necklace in a manner little short of miraculous. A fortnight ago Mr. and Mrs. Little went to an opera. In leaving the opera house the necklace, a wedding gift to Mrs. Little from her husband, became unbuckled, and, taking it off, she put it into the pocket of her opera cloak. A day or two later Mrs. Little gave the cloak to her maid having no further use for it. The maid not being able to wear the cloak, sold it to an establishment where women's cast-off clothes are dealt in. A day or two ago the woman who bought the clothes shop got the cloak out for the purpose of renovating it. In the pocket she found the string of pearls, and when a jeweler next door told her the value of the necklace she nearly fainted. Consultation of the books of the shop showed the name of the maid from whom the cloak had been purchased and the jewels were returned to Mrs. Little, who had not missed them.

GET DYE FROM COAL STONES.

Large Purchases of Japanese from Chicago Packers Is Explained.

The buying of gall stones by the Japanese from Chicago packers is said by Philadelphia chemists to be for chemical purposes. Dr. J. Jaisohn, a native Japanese, said his people were very impatient in awaiting dyes from gall stones and they are entirely experimenting. He believes they have discovered a new green dye, which is being kept a secret. Dr. W. M. Vaughn of the Jefferson Hospital said gall stones had no medicinal value, and that the Japanese use the gall stones for the greenish-yellow pigment, a color also obtained from the gall stones. Dr. Sadwo Amemiya chemist and author of a work on the chemistry of animal tissues, said the Japanese may have the secret of the method of using the gall stones, and the Japanese may have the secret of the method of using the gall stones, other chemists said gall stones contained coloring properties.

INDUSTRIES ARE REVIVING.

Workers of All Kinds Are Reported in Great Demand.

Business throughout the United States, both commercial and industrial, is reviving, according to Tee-cure V. Dawdorfy, editor of the statistics of information, bureau of organization. The division of information was created by Congress as an agency to direct immigration from the larger cities, and find places for the men displaced when. The functions of the division have been enlarged, inasmuch as that Dawdorfy is endeavoring to provide work for Americans as well as aliens.

From July 1 last until early in October 200,000 requests were made upon Chief Dawdorfy to supply various forms of labor for factory, railroad, farm and industrial enterprises of all descriptions. About the middle of October, when the financial disturbances became acute, many of these applications were canceled, corporations stating that instead of need of more help they were laying off men. Nevertheless, the demand for help in the national industrial centers continued to be in excess of the supply. Thousands of unemployed men from well-to-do, well-to-do, prevented the expansion and continued the dances to half a dozen build.

BUBONIC PLAGUE DISAPPEARING

War on Disease Requires Lives of 130,000 Rats in San Francisco.

With only seven cases of bubonic plague reported during the month of December and only three cases remaining under treatment at the quarantine hospital, the plague in San Francisco is almost eradicated as a result of the vigorous sanitary campaign waged during the last four months by the United States marine hospital service under the direction of Surgeon Rupert Blue.

This month the plague has not been reported, but work has been carried on in the rat-proofing of the city, and the health officers are standing ready to declare the plague is eradicated if no more cases are reported.

Since the plague appeared in San Francisco, 130,000 rats have been destroyed during the last four months. Thirty-five thousand six hundred and forty-seven rats were brought to the laboratory of the health department for this purpose. Fifty-five thousand six hundred and forty-seven were examined for bubonic plague and 400 found to be infected.

The total number of cases reported to date are 126; deaths, 12; cured, 99; remaining under treatment, 3; suspected cases, 18.

CHICAGO.

While the movement of production in various industrial branches continues, there is evidence of a favorable nature for steady improvement to take place soon. With the banks now virtually back to specie payment and discount operations resumed, it is not surprising that the volume of business, as reflected by bank clearings, should show the exhibit in nine weeks, the comparative decline being the lowest in that period.

Following the extra time taken to make necessary repairs to plants, resumption became general and quickly doubled the number of workers made temporarily idle, and the indications now turn for the better at the furnaces, mills and forges.

Some substantial bookings appear in iron, steel and wire, and fair orders come forward in furniture, hosiery, footwear and vehicles. Little change is expected in prices of finished products, but a feeling that costs may be lowered is in evidence in several instances where much capital is involved.

Weather conditions advance the January clearance sales, which are now underging satisfactory reduction, and a considerable increase appears in early buyers attended the wholesale markets for staples, notwithstanding slow collecting and food products. Moreover, collections through the West are improving, some sections resuming generally, while in others the situation is slower to mend.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 26, against 22 last week and 20 in the year ago, which liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 1 last week and 8 in 1907.—Inter-Ocean Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Financial affairs show further and marked improvement, and money is more plentiful and easier. Reports of the gain in trade and industry prepare is still encouraging and promising. Business is quiet, the country over, railway earnings and bank clearings show a decided gain over last year's show, though better than a month ago, and industry is on a better basis, as shown by the larger centers reporting a great number of operatives.

In trade from the general report is one of improvement, although the entire year still a bar to the widest activities in seasonable goods. New York and West, and the Southwest and Southeast, the entire country is standing lagging demand by the wholesale trade, which shows little more life than a week ago. Some lines report after-holiday collections are more pleased than a week ago, and in some cases better than anticipated, but they go far from other cities.

NEWS OF MINOR NOTE.

A large increase in the national guard of Illinois is sought by the State military board.

Government in Oklahoma introduced a bill providing for the taking of depositions in contested cases by the commissioner of deputies.

Senator Owen of Oklahoma introduced a bill providing for the taking of depositions in contested cases by the commissioner of deputies.

The Federal Grand Jury, sitting in Jan. 21, 1908, the time allowed militia companies of the various States to confirm their organization to that prescribed for the regular army, was extended by the House and goes to the President for his signature.

Representative Hill of Connecticut introduced a resolution authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to furnish to the public the total laws of the United States, and to provide for the publication of the laws of any other State and doing a railway business from one point in the State to another point within the State, shall remove a case from the State court to a United States court without the written consent of the other party, or shall institute a suit against a citizen of the State in any United States court, or shall remove a suit, the Secretary of State shall revoke its license to do business from one point within the State to any other point within the State.

A proposition for a reduction of the per diem charge of 25 cents for the use of freight cars is being considered by the American Railway Association. This is a step in the direction of the plan of New Haven and Hartford, and also to the plan of the Illinois Central, which has resulted in a plentiful supply of cars.

The bill reducing the "Cullom laws of the Illinois Central" has passed the House, and is now considered by the Senate Monday, and it is expected will be reported from committee and passed by the Senate. A lower rate receipt and free from Chicago Illinois Central, the delay in giving the material spares which and has not been forthcoming, opportunity to express views on the immigration question was afforded members of the House by the introduction of a resolution, to take up and consider a bill to provide for the land and immigration station in Philadelphia, and so many look after the interests of the land and bill, which the managers of the House have decided to be the best which has been tracked for the day. The entire session was devoted to a consideration of the bill, which was passed.

NATIONAL CAPITAL NOTES

A free ore bill was introduced in the House by Mr. Hughes of Ohio. It was referred to the committee on ways and means.

Representative Mann of Chicago introduced a bill permitting railroads to carry free transportation for officers and employes of other lines.

Senator Beveridge, after a conference with the Postmaster General and the two Nebraska Senators, decided to appoint Benjamin F. Thomas as postmaster of Omaha.

The House committee on buildings and grounds recommended the purchase, at a cost of $6,000,000, of the present Pennsylvania avenue and the Mall, extending from the capitol to the treasury building, and the erection thereon of buildings for the Department of Justice and the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Senator Tillman is swamped daily with letters from all parts of the country praising him for his speech on the anti-prohibition.

Senator Owen of Oklahoma introduced a bill providing for the taking of depositions in contested cases by the commissioner of deputies.

The Senate was not in session Friday, and the number of remaining bills the House at 1:25 p. m. adjourned until Monday. The penal code bill was not taken up.

Woman First in Egypt.

Egyptian papers report that 60 years old, which has been brought in the Tokeh district of Egypt, and with other antiquities, is found to be of exceptional importance, as it establishes the date of the reign of a queen of the fifth dynasty and throws light on the condition of woman in the ancient Egyptian. The name of the writer who signs this papyrus is Queen Nitocris, the Nitocris of the Greek university, which bears a definite date, the eighteenth year of the reign of Pharaoh Kakhnabis places the reign of that Pharaoh in the year 2500 B. C. and confirms the statement of the Greek historian Herodotus that Nitocris was the last ruler of the sixth dynasty.

A new and destructive disease of horses has made its appearance in Pennsylvania, and has been reported to the State veterinary department by taking every precaution to prevent the disease from the spread of the disease. It is a very fatal disease, and has been known for a long time in India, China, Japan and the Philippine Islands, and more recently in South Africa. From South Africa it was carried to Egypt, thence to Italy, Germany and Ireland, where the British Board of Agriculture has been carrying on a strict fight for several years. When or by what agency it reached Pennsylvania has not been discovered.

The disease is described incurable have been destroyed. The others are in quarantine. The disease is a dangerous one and herd is combat.

Assaulting Sea Traffic Pact.

Before the House of Representatives Committee the Commodities Shipping Company, through Peter Wright & Sons of Philadelphia, is, in the opinion of the designer of the big ocean liner complete. The ship is 600 feet long, 75 feet wide, with dividing rates and lines to deliver the cargo at Philadelphia, and otherwise consulting to create a monopoly of the business of the ocean. The Senate Senator had told that the commission had no jurisdiction over traffic between points in the United States and in other parts of the world. The Senate Senator replies that if these practices are in violation of the law, the trusts, in fact, will be conspicuously liquid, and asks the commission to investigate.

WORK OF CONGRESS

TWO CENT FARE LAW VOID IN PENNSYLVANIA

State Supreme Court Holds Act Unconstitutional, Affirming Recent Philadelphia Decision.

FEDERAL COURTS ARE OPEN.

Missouri Law Forfeiting Charters of Companies Appealing from State Tribunals Declared Invalid.

The 2-cent railroad fare law in force in Pennsylvania was decided unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court, which handed down an opinion affirming the decision of the Common Pleas Court of Philadelphia, rendered last November. This decision covers, for Eastern railways, which may foreshadow similar victories throughout the country, and simultaneously with news from Kansas City of a Federal court decision declaring void the law of Missouri, now forfeiting the charters of corporations appealing from State courts to the United States courts. The vote of the Supreme Court on the 2-cent fare was 4 to 3.

The 2-cent fare law was entered by the Democratic Legislature, which passed it, but passing both houses by a virtually unanimous vote. The railroads fought the bill vigorously, and it was a fight in which the Pennsylvania Railroad became involved, the contest being between the State and the County of Philadelphia from enforcing the act. The railroad contended that the law was unconstitutional in that it was unreasonable and confiscatory, and that it violated the company's contract. The county then took the case to the State Supreme court, which decided against the 2-cent fare in several counties, but the Supreme court in its decision only one to reach the Supreme Court.

Cannon Courts Their Chairmen.

Speaker Cannon has called the Smith McPherson of the United States Electric Company to develop a system of electrical signals for the minutes passed in the Missouri Legislature in 1907 forbidding foreign corporations from transferring suits brought against them from the State to Federal courts under pain of forfeiture of their charters. The application of several railway companies for an injunction to prevent the Secretary of State from enforcing the law was granted by the court.

The Missouri law which the decision affects provides specifically that if any foreign or non-resident railway corporation, created and existing under the laws of any other State and doing a railway business from one point in the State to another point within the State, shall remove a case from the State court to a United States court without the written consent of the other party, or shall institute a suit against a citizen of the State in any United States court, or shall remove a suit, the Secretary of State shall revoke its license to do business from one point within the State to any other point within the State.

The Senate was not in session Friday, and the number of remaining bills the House at 1:25 p. m. adjourned until Monday. The penal code bill was not taken up.

HOPE TO BEAT BRYAN

ANYTHING TO DOWN THE GREAT DEFEATED.

Indication of a Concerted Movement to Play Johnson of Minnesota for the Nomination Against the Peerless but Unsuccessful Nebraskan.

Upon the following declaration by a candidate for the democratic nomination for President of the United States the New York World, a leader of Democratic thought and very ably among the democratic newspapers, of the United States, based its appeal for a grand rally around the flag of true Democracy:

"The commercial and industrial development of this country has reached a point where the proper adjustment of right has become the question of the hour. The present unrest of our people is evidence of the determination shown by all that the Funds of the Government of this government shall be maintained. These include the dignity of labor, equality before the law, the equal enforcement of the laws, and entire absence of special privileges.

"Great opportunities, especially those concerning at least four of the five parts of government, must come to the realization that they are as amenable to the law as is the humblest citizen.

"The trust problem is still to be solved, but which seems ripe for the complete remedy, we can at least withdraw from their grasp the special privileges they have enjoyed under a high protective tariff.

"It is now apparent that our present tariff, while mainly responsible for the existence of the trusts, is in addition, a bar upon the masses for the benefit of the few.

"The farming of taxes in France, before the Revolution, was no more iniquitous than is our present tariff system, which enriches a few and sets up a monopoly year by year for the single benefit of the manufacturers of the country.

"This tariff, which was passed by the Democratic party and the country, will then took the case to the State Supreme court, which decided against the 2-cent fare in several counties, but the Supreme court in its decision only one to reach the Supreme Court.

Political Comment.

Renouncing Our Sanity.

They are not who profess to believe that this country is only on the threshold of its financial troubles that more serious times are coming and that the paralysis of industry will be more acute before we can be assured of permanent relief.

Charlevoix Sentinel
WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR.

Mr. Darragh's Withdrawal.

In another column we publish a Washington special, announcing Congressman Darragh's withdrawal from the 11th district congressional contest. Cutting off any following grabs of Mr. Darragh at this time, we content ourself with the remark that he faithfully and ably represented his district in all essentials.

And we hope Mr. Darragh is not correctly quoted when he is made to say that it costs (no mean) money to buy the newspapers in the smaller towns"

There may be newspapers in the district that are for sale in the sense intimated by Mr. Darragh. Indeed we think we can pick out one in Charlevoix county that has sold its "influence," but it was before Mr. Darragh was Congressman. We do not believe, however, that Mr. Darragh made the remark attributed to him. If he did, he is becoming reckless, because the scope of the statement closes the innocent with the guilty, and cast a doubt upon the rectitude of those editors who supported him from his heart, patriotic conviction that he was the proper candidate to favor. But let that pass.

Mr. Darragh is everlastingly right in his reference to the primary election system, in its adaptability to corrupt and nefarious methods of political processes. There can be no mistake in his attitude on that subject, for it has been demonstrated.

But the canvas for honors in the 11th promises to be a lively one, and there will be more than two candidates come into the primaries. Some chickens, the merry cackle of which has not been heard for twenty months, will come home to roost again, but the cockle will not be so pronounced in its vigor.

There are game cocks in the southern part of the district that have spurs considerably longer than they were two years ago, and there will be at least one bloody comb at the upper end.

Political and General.

Congressman Darragh has announced himself as a candidate for delegate to the National republican convention. It is also reported that Mr. Darragh will not be a candidate for re nomination to his present position.

There will be no river and harbor bill this session of Congress. It is expected, however, that the rivers and harbors of the Charlevoix bridge will be repaired from funds on hand, and possibly some dredging done at the upper channel.

State treasurer Glatter has finally resigned, at the demand of Gov. Warner, and the governor has appointed John T. Rich, of Detroit, to fill the vacancy. The governor and former treasurer are now engaged in a very acrimonious controlab.

Wm. H. White, the Boyne City lumberman, is a candidate for delegate to the republican national convention. Mr. White is one of the foremost manufacturers of Michigan, and a stalwart in politics. The SENTINEL heartily endorses Mr. White for the position.

Sitting as a board of review, the state tax commission lately listened to objections of the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena railroad to the assessment of its property at $16,000. A hearing has been arranged by the commission at which a representative of the various roads will be heard in opposition to the assessment.

Among the interesting items of railroad news in Monday's papers is one stating that Leroy S. Lednard, the head of the Michigan Central Railroad Co. was recently elected a director of the re-organized Pere Marquette Co., just that at the next meeting, in February, he was to take position on the executive board of the Pere Marquette Co.

By the reapportionment made by the legislature at the last session Charlevoix county was taken from the senatorial district and Alcona added. The latter county being in a district that has not adopted primary reform makes it necessary to again submit the question if the republican senators nominated this year by the primary method. The leaders of the party are unanimous whether or not to submit the question or nominate in convention.

THE PRIMARY LAW.

Gov. Warner Sends Out a Chunk of Information Concerning It.

Gov. Warner sends out to the voters of Michigan a circular letter with the following information concerning the new primary law:

The new primary law goes into effect January 25th, 1908, as many inquiries have been received regarding its operation, I have deemed it advisable to call the attention of the people to a use of its provisions. Any further information desired will be promptly furnished.

Those who desire to take part in primary elections under the law will be required to enroll if they have not already done so. Under the provisions of the new law, the first Tuesday in September will hereafter be the day upon which all primary elections for county, legislative and congressional nominations will be made, as well as for Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Two enrollment days are provided for by the new law, one on the registration day previous to the spring election, and one on the Saturday previous to the September primary, the first Tuesday of the month, occuring this year on September 1st. There is no new enrollment required except for those who have changed their residence or party affiliation.

All congressional districts, counties and representative districts which adopted the direct nominating system under the law of 1905 remain under the new law. This is also true of those senatorial districts, the boundaries of which were not changed under the senatorial apportionment of the last regular session. A resubmission of the question is necessary in all senatorial districts where changes were made. Formal announcement of his candidacy and will begin his campaign work as soon as possible.

Geo. G. Covell, U. S. district attorney for the western district of Michigan is in Washington and it is known that he has congressional aspirations, but he has not made known his intention to enter the field for nomination this year.

Primary reform in Michigan is painfully responsible for Congressman Darragh's withdrawal from politics, according to his own story. He says that it takes too money money to get the nomination nowadays.

"I have been through one primary campaign, and I know," said Darragh. "Under the convention system we had delegates who did not want money, but they were anxious to have the best man for the party. Now, one strong essential required for success is the use of plenty of cash."

Mr. Darragh says that newspapers in the small towns are ready to sold themselves and sell out to the highest bidder.

DARRAGH DECLINES.

Will Not Be a Candidate for Congress Again.

A Washington special says: Congressman Darragh of the eleventh congressional district has announced his intention to retire from congress after a creditable service extending over many years. The Michigan delegation regrets Mr. Darragh's determination.

As soon as formal announcement was made, Dennis E. Alward, for many years reading clerk of the house of representatives and secretary of the Michigan state central committee, made formal announcement of his candidacy and will begin his campaign work as soon as possible.

Geo. G. Covell, U. S. district attorney for the western district of Michigan is in Washington and it is known that he has congressional aspirations, but he has not made known his intention to enter the field for nomination this year.

A Cure for Misery.
"I have found a cure for the misery malaria poison produces," says R. M. James, of Loudien, S. C. "It's called Electric Bitters, and comes in 50 cent bottles. It breaks up a case of chills or a bilious attack almost as quick, and it puts yellow jaundice clean out of commission." This great tonic medicine and blood purifier gives quick relief in all stomach, liver and kidney complaints and the misery of lame back. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 25c.

—On Tuesday Mr. Stafford moved the new city gasoline engine from Kirkland's machine shop to its foundation in the pump house. It will be ready for instant use, in case of an emergency. It is a four cylinder, 150 horse power gasoline, and weighs five tons. It is only intended for use when the electric current fails, and will effectually guard against water or light shortage.

—The following may be of interest to those who patronize catalog houses: "The Chicago Catalog firm of Sears, Roebuck & Co., was found guilty recently by the Federal Grand Jury at Des Moines, Iowa, on a charge of using the mails to defraud. The indictment found charges specifically in one count that paint was sold as being of the highest grade, of the same seven special make, and containing white lead, whereas the paint was of inferior quality, was not made by the firm, and contained no white lead. In two other counts it is charged rings were sold by catalog numbers as containing a certain amount of pearls, sapphires and rubies, and it is alleged that none of those stones were genuine."

—Regardless of what the constitutional convention may do, prohibition will be submitted to a vote of the people in 14 counties this spring. The Anti-Saloon league made a demand yesterday in 75 counties this winter for submission of the question and in all but one, Branch, has been successful, according to A. S. Aldrich, of Grand Rapids, superintendent for the western part of the state. These are the counties in which prohibition will be submitted: Cass, Barry, Gratiot, Oceola, Grand Traverse, St. Joseph, Oakland, Midland, Shiawassee, Ottawa, Kalamazoo, Clinton, Gladwin, Wexford. In one county, Van Buren, now the only dry county in southwestern lower Michigan, the question will be submitted for the second time. The saloon men made an attempt to get the question submitted but were unsuccessful and Van Buren will be dry."

ALLIE MOORE VICTOR AGAIN.

The Charlevoix Roller Skater Wins Another World Championship.

At Pittsburg Saturday, Allie Moore, of this city, won the five mile World's Championship on a roller skater. About two weeks ago Allie won the one mile Championship. Speaking of the event, the Pittsburg Dispatch says:

"A new roller skating record was established in Pittsburg last night when Allie Moore of Charlevoix, Mich., covered five miles in the remarkable time of 15:6.

"It is generally conceded that he skates under an advantage over those who prefer the rollers, and if this is true then Moore's performance is all the more remarkable. Last year the Bangsian Garden Morris Wood, the world's greatest ice skater, made a new mark when he skated five miles in 15:55, just two seconds slower than the mark made last night by Moore.

"There was another large crowd present last night when 21 skaters responded to the call for the final heat in the five mile event of the big tournament, which has been in progress in the Eye rink for two weeks, and one of the most beautiful speed contests in the history of the sport was witnessed.

"Allie is apparently striking more trouble in company, it we may judge from the following from the Pittsburg Press:

"Allie Moore, the Charlevoix, Mich., roller skater, who is here competing in the championship races at the Exposition rink, that entirely satisfied with certain rules that have been enforced within the past few days regarding his performances in this city. He ended at this office this afternoon, and, depositing a forfeit of $25, left the following challenge, which is self explanatory.

"Allie Moore, of Charlevoix, Mich., now skating under the auspices of the Pittsburg Press, and wishing to make the best of fifty dollars ($50.00) that he can defeat any speed roller skater competing at the Exposition rink at the present time. This forfeit will be left at The Press to be covered with Wednesday evening, February 5. Lee Jenner, of St. Louis, Mo., is preferred as an equal rather skating diversion, twice twenty five ($25.00). CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

The old man was pale and nervous. The cox-swain could in his characteristic way his affection for his son. An affection which he strove to hide under an austere manner, but which was none the less genuine. He had never before entered with his boy at any length of them and he felt the wrench keenly. As the train left the platform and vanished in the distance the sex sexton which he was about during recreation in which he was about to embark. He flung himself into a cab and ordered it to think concerning Gaston in front of him.

"I know as much about science," he said cautiously, "as any man in London. I was operating a king of rough cases in Van Helsmer's co-day, and he is reckoned a good judge. He said that my experiment could have done it better."

"You deserve great credit for your patience and perseverance," replied his father. "Your knowledge with the lens enable to you know you are at the right. You will promise to be careful in the avoid contact with anything dangerous."

"I won't get into any row if I can help it," he said, smiling. "That's not my game."

"Then if you think that there is no risk involved, your opponent is undoubtedly about to succeed in calculating, shot him down at once, my dear lad, before he has time to draw. It is a pity that you have been out there so long that in such cases have been out there so long that in such cases everything depends on the quick eye and steady hand. I am anxious about you, and shall be easy until I hear you are safe."

"Humph! I haven't been in big scrapes, Ezra exclaimed to himself, much amused at this unprecedented nervousness.

"When do you go?" his father asked.

"My traits leave us an hour or so," replied the steamer at Southampton about noon, so I shall be down at the sea with the full tide at six. Well, good-by," said the young man, rising and holding out his hand. "Keep your eye on Hiram Slade and don't trust him."

"Goodbye, my son, goodbye."

The old merchant was honestly moved, and his voice quivered as he spoke. He stood motionless for a minute or so and the heavy door slowly and softly as he threw open the window and peered anxiously down the street at the disappearing cab. His whole attitude expressed unadulterated dejection that his wife, who had joined the room, felt more drawn towards him than she had ever felt before. Stepping up to him, she placed her warm, tender hand upon his trembling shoulder.

"He will soon come back, dear Mr. Girdlestone," she said. "You must not be disheartened."

As she stood beside him in her white dress, with a single red ribbon round her neck and a bunch of the same color round her waist, she had in her a fair specimen of Dogfin, gribbed as could have been found in all London. The merchant's features softened as he looked down at her fresh young face, and he put out his hand as though to caress her, but some unpleasant thought must have crossed his mind, for he scowled suddenly a darker shade than before.

"Wait! he give us something at parting," he muttered, like many. He was a severe looking, lanky man, with a hard, cold face and overhanging eyebrows. "Won't he give us cousins to divide, brains, big?"

"Why, sir, he says you are well."

"Then he thought," cried the navvy, lashing even rudder than nature had made him. "Is that the way he speaks of his betters, eh? Is that the way he speaks of his betters, eh? Is that the way he speaks of his betters, eh?

GOLD COINS.

Why Bankers Don't Like Them and Prefer to Handle Paper.

"Of the different kinds of American money I, as it circulates the gold dollars of all denominations are the most disliked in my business," said a prominent New York banker.

"Take a greenback, a silver or a gold certificate or a national bank note to your bank and it is received and placed to your credit without a moment's delay. Not so with gold. A few days ago a gentleman brought to our bank upward of $5,000 in gold of different denominations and was much provoked because we would not receive it and give him credit with the amount, the face of the coin represented. This we could not do because the law requires that gold shall be redeemed only at its actual value. Coins carried in the pocket for any length of time invariably show something by abrasion—probably but a fractional part of a cent on a ten dollar piece but it is a loss nevertheless and therefore bankers cannot give credit for gold deposits until the coin shall have been weighed. In the case mentioned my friend took his gold to the subtreasury and was compelled to wait there nearly an hour before his coins got taken for it.

"Every coin had to be passed through the scales, and after the weighing process had been completed three of the coins—two five dollar pieces and a ten dollar piece—were returned to him as short in weight. Before returning short weight coins the department stamps on the face of each coin a crone. The owner is either left to stand the loss to the United States mint for redemption or again put them into circulation. Practically the coins with crosses on their faces will go to the mint and be melted at their actual value. In many instances there may not be more than several cents' shortage on $20 worth of coins. Business men, however, naturally object to the inconvenience and get rid of their gold as fast as possible."—New York Press.

KEATS ON MARRIAGE.

Barrier Against Matrimony In Which the Poet Rejoiced.

Notwithstanding your happiness and your recommendation, I hope I shall never marry. Though the most happy and creative were waiting for me at the end of a journey or a walk, though the carpet were of silk, the curtains of the morning clouds, the curtains and architect very opposite down, the food manna, the wine beyond claret, the windows opening on Winnander mere, I should not feel, or rather, my happiness would not be so fine, as my sole mate is sublime. Then, instead of what I have described, there is a infinity to welcome me home. The roaring of the wind is my wife, and the stars through the window pane are my children. The night air is my bliss. I love of beauty in all things strikes the more divided and minute domestic happiness—an amiable wife and sweet children I contemplate as a part of that beauty, but I must have a thousand of these beautiful particles to fill my heart.

I feel more and more every day as my imagination strengthens that I do not live in this world alone, but in a spiritual world. No sooner am I alone than shapes of epic greatness are stationed around me and serve as spirits the office which is equivalent to a king's body guard—then "Tragedy with sceptered pall comes sweeping by." According to my state of mind I am with Achilles shouting in the trenches or with Theocritus in the vales of Sicily, or I throw my mind into Indian Pindus, and repeating those lines, "I wander like a lost soul upon the Stygian banks, stay, stay for mercy, I shall melt into the air with a voluptuousness so delicious that I am content to be alone. These things, combined with the opinion I have of the generality of women, who appear to me as children to whom I would rather give a sugarplum than a wife, form a barrier against union among which I rejoice in.—"Poems of John Keats," by Walter Ralegh.

Something More Interesting.

The old darky was having his eyes tested for glasses. After the oculist had put on several cards of Roman letters, which the negro calmly enunciated to suit the operator, he looked over at the oculist and asked, with some disgust:

"Where's de one in de kin' at dem flows?"

"Why, then I'm trying to find out how far you can see distinctly," returned the eye specialist.

"Wah," declared the old darky, suspicious, "dey ain't worth tryin' to make out. Put up er watermillion!"—Bohemian.

The Origin of the Holy Stone.

At the reformation, when the Church of St. Nicholas at Yarmouth was occupied, the carved stones of many of the monuments, both in the church and outside in the graveyard, were dislodged and, some to Newcastle to be turned into grindstones and some on board the ships of the royal navy of the day to be used in scour ing the decks, whence, it is interesting to know, the seamen's term "holystone sing the deck" takes its origin.—Louisville Standard.

Moles as Means ristis.

Like the squirrel and a few other animals, the mole lays up a store of food during the autumn month s. A curious and interesting fact s is in relation to this storage is that t he mole does not kill the worms it col ects, but stupefies them in such a way an d that they do not attempt to escape.—Country Life.

Troubles of an Author.

"I thought you had go ne to raising bees," said the man from the city. "I don't see any sign of I been around here."

"I find just a dozen or so cole of the finest bees I could get," a nswered the industrious "and a whole library of literature on bee raisin g, but they swarmed one day, and a little I was looking through my books to find out what was the proper thing to do when they have swarmed the blamed gway, and I've never seen 'em since."—Chicago Tribune.

A good way to get on is the world is to make people think you are doing it.—New York Press.

ONLY NATIONAL CANDIDATE.

Ohio Has In Taft One Fine and Willing Chance to Furnish the Next President.

Seventy Michigan Republicans, strong and influential enough to be eleventh delegates to the convention which is revising the constitution of their state, have been polled on the question of their party's choice of a leader in the coming national campaign. Their verdict is a bitter slap at every Republican in ohio who believes his state is furnish the next president ought to hord.

Only five refused to tes their preference. Of the 66 who voted, 44 were for Taft. Only 21 were divided among Hughes, Cannon, Root, Cortelyou and Lafollette. Taft beat the field two to one. Foraker was not mentioned. Neither was Fairbanks.

Here is the voice of a strong Republican state which has no candidate of its own. It is not geographical influence which creates Hughes wave. Taft. He lives in the same city with Foraker. Fairbanks is closer to Michigan than Cincinnati is Cannon, also, is nearer the Michigan boundary where he is at home. Lafollette is just across Lake Michigan.

Michigan is for Taft for the same reasons which make him the only national candidate of his party. Michigan is for the man who is for President Roosevelt's policies and principles. Michigan is in favor of putting the biggest man in the party, its most commanding figure, with Theodore Roosevelt out of the question at the head of the Republican ticket.

It is Taft or no Ohioan, in the view of representative Michigan Republicans. It is the same everywhere Ohio has a one chance—a fine and winning one—to furnish the next president. That one chance is the nomination of William Howard Taft.—Ironton Register.

WHAT HE WANTED.

Even friends of Senator Foraker will find difficulty in understanding why he objects to a primary election, when only a few weeks ago he told he s would a primary and would be satisfied with the result. The official call of the state committee to certain persons consists of only one sentence: "A primary would enable Republican voters in Indiana to be clearly distinguished." It seems from the senator said on the floor of the call and based his refusal to be bound by it on the unsaid report furnished by the committee. He said that if he had if Senator Foraker can find a way to act in harmony with all the Republicans of the state in his effort to adjust such differences as exist in the party in Ohio.—Indiana independent.

PRESS OPINION OF TAFT

The Taft movement is sweeping the state, because it is founded on the right and on broad public good to all the people.—Lorain, O. Herald.

Secretary Taft, the lower not his head under any circumstances or in any emergency, is the man for the president.—Akron, O. Beacon-Journal.

Ohio's statesmen for all the president stands for and this ought to satisfy the most exacting.—Port Clinton, O. Republican.

Our Democratic friends who are boosting the nomination eliminate of every Republican candidate except Taft, give us the impression that they are trying hard to induce the Republican hand occupy. They cannot fail to see it, for it is labeled TAFT in large letters.—Dayton, O. Herald.

What we do want is a strong Republican administration, and we believe that Secretary Taft is the best man for the place. Let us all get together today, to show to the tenors of President Roosevelt. For that reason we wish to see him nominated for president by the Republican party, and if he does there is no end in securing for him a solid backing from this old Buckeye state.—Oberlin, O. Tribune.

There is not a man in Ohio, even among the adherents of Senator Foraker, who doubts that this state is for Secretary Taft. There is not a man who has the interests of the political conditions throughout the country who does not know that even if Senator Foraker could secure the support of ohio he would stand no chance of getting the presidential nomination.—Wauseon, O. Tribune.

Secretary of War Taft has been looked to as the man who will follow the Roosevelt plan in government. He is a native of this state and strongly against the boss rule.—Canton, O. Leader.

There will be less danger to the country from foes without or within with Judge Taft at the helm, than with any other man who can be named. He can lay down a decision, do a piece of work, some off graft, smooth down a foes, and uphold the honor of his country with a facility that is unparalleled. We are for Secretary of War W. H. Taft for president.—Caldwell, O. Journal.

There is no excuse for doubting or misinterpreting the attitude of Judge Taft on any of the leading issues. He is on line with his party's most advanced position, whether the money question, the tariff question, the railroad question, the trust question or the question of expansion, is considered. And his ability and his experience in office are sufficient guarantee that as president he would run his furrows if according to the party's charts, in a way to give the country the full benefit of his best powers.—Washington Star.

Evils of Modern Life.

Eating in restaurants has driven many a man into matrimony, declares the Bellmaster, and living in boarding houses and hotels later has driven many a man out of matrimony.

Daily Thought.

How can a man come to know himself? Never by thinking, but by doing. Try to do your duty and you will know at once what you are made of.—Goethe.

WHAT IS OBJECTION?

Foraker's Old Personal Organ Says Primary Call Entirely Complies With Senator's Request.

Cincinnati Commercial Tribune Declares All Republicans Are Given Fair and Equal Opportunity, and Provisions in Call Are Necessary for Protection of All.

For many years the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune has been the one prominent newspaper organ of Senator Foraker. Its editorial views are always in accordance with those of the senator. Its loyalty in this respect has been proverbial.

After carefully studying the call of the Republican state central committee for the state convention, with its provisions for the election of delegates from each county at direct and fair primaries, the Commercial Tribune declares the call to be exactly what Senator Foraker asked for in his letter to State Chairman Walter Brown.

In discussing the call the Commercial Tribune, in a leading editorial under the caption "What is the Objection?" says:

Acted on Foraker's Request.

What objection is to be found to the action of the state central committee directing the holding of a primary election in ohio for the purpose of ascertaining the preference of the Republicans in the election of the president? If, under the call of the committee, a majority of the Republicans in ohio prefer Senator Foraker for president, they will have an opportunity to express their choice in the primary election. If, under the call of the committee, a majority of the Republicans in ohio prefer Senator Taft, they will have an opportunity to express their choice in the primary election. If, under the call of the committee, a majority of the Republicans in ohio prefer Senator Foraker, they will have an opportunity to express their choice in the primary election. If, under the call of the committee, a majority of the Republicans in ohio prefer Senator Taft, they will have an opportunity to express their choice in the primary election. If, under the call of the committee, a majority of the Republicans in ohio prefer neither Senator Foraker nor

DEFENSELESS PACIFIC COAST.

One Cruiser and Four Night Could Destroy Seattle and Tacoma.

The departure of the fleet of sixteen battleships for its long cruise has at least served the purpose of drawing attention to the lamentably weak and unprepared condition of the Pacific coast, writes a Washington correspondent. From Lower California to the Canadian boundary we have absolutely no protection against invasion. Save at San Francisco, Representative Humphrey, of the State of Washington, made it plain to President Roosevelt recently that a second-class cruiser on a foggy night could steam into Puget Sound and shell Seattle and Tacoma off the face of the earth without receiving a shot in reply.

The President was so impressed that he asked Mr. Humphrey to prepare a report, in connection with his Pacific coast inspection, as to what defensive measures should be more necessary and desirable.

San Diego and San Pedro in California are equally as unprotected as the Washington cities, and are wholly at the mercy of any foreign which may approach from the sea. It would not take a formidable force to get the best possible protection and to prepare for a contingency for a Pacific fleet. It is estimated that $750,000 expended in dredging out the approach channel at San Diego would make a splendid harbor, easily defended by coal fortifications and by torpedoes, the cost of which would be instantly available for service elsewhere along the coast.

Let us hope that the Atlantic fleet will do when it reaches our Pacific coast. It is generally conceded that Mexico has granted us permission to make use of Magdalena bay for the purpose, but it is claimed in certain quarters that the ships will be in no position for anything more to do after drydock for a complete overhauling. The fleet will then need a coaling and supply period. There is not a drydock or a navy yard commodious enough for the fleet within 1,500 miles down to Puget Sound and Seattle and Tacoma off the face of the earth without receiving a shot in reply.

The More Island navy yard at San Francisco is the only drydock.

There is doubt expressed by those who ought to know, backing both politicians in the commodiousness of the navy, that the possibility of a fleet, when it arrived in the Pacific, may turn out to be as poorly prepared for as are the other fortifications.

PROGRESS OF THE THAW MURDER TRIAL

Court Refuses to Exclude the Public While Defendant's Wife Is on the Stand.

EVELYN A MATCH FOR JEROME.

Drops Child-Like Pose and Fences Well—District Attorney Merciless in His Examination.

Just as a year ago Evelyn Nesbit Thaw took her place witness in the second trial of her husband for the murder of Stanford White, interest in Attorney Jerome, of whom it had been hinted that he would prove the woman no mercy this time, mixed that the public be excluded, and Littleton, for the defense, raised no objection, but Judge Dowling held that the prisoner had a right to a public trial.

During the first week Littleton devoted himself to demonstrate Thaw's insanity, by right of inheritance and by his actions from infancy to the time of murder. His purpose in putting Evelyn Thaw on the stand was to demonstrate how the story of her alleged wrongs by White, which she says she began in Paris, acted on his erratic brain with such force as to make him irresponsible insane.

Under his questioning she unburdened her pose of the innocent school girl who in her innocence had been made the toy of a monster. But under Jerome's more cross-examination she dropped the mask of girlish innocence which she had worn when rolling on the smooth waters of direct examination. She revealed herself as a shrewd woman of the world, at times more than a match for her questioner.

Mrs Mills, according to her story, was summoned to appear at the Moore house when she was ordered in she was led into a dimly lighted room to wait her coming. Then she was led into a room up to the high pressure.

"This will be a test of your fortitude," she said to her sister. You are ordered to shoot your lover into a pulp of mashed meat, which you are before you. Ready! Fire! order."

Mrs Mills denied the hand into the liquid and sank to her knees in right. After she recovered her consciousness she was surprised to note that the room was empty.

Suddenly the lights went out. Mrs Mills was left in the dark and terrified. She felt herself go down, down, and then land on the floor.

The candidate was ordered to grasp the knob of a door, which she could not find. Instead, for which she unfortunately dove back her arm when she felt the electric current. Her arm still bears the chemicals skin glove filled with sand.

Again she was led forth, this time to drink a nauseating liquid out of a skull. Then she was ordered to take off her dress and to lie down with her other prospective sister.

Resisting at each guilty she was compelled to drink the skull.

LEADING FIGURES IN THE THAW TRIAL.

MARTIN W. LITTLETON, THAW'S CHIEF COUNSEL.

MILLION DOLLAR FIRE.

City Hall and Police Buildings at Portland, Me. Destroyed.

Fire which caused damage of $1,000,000 destroyed the Portland, Me., city hall and police buildings and endangered the lives of many thousand persons. The city hall was occupied by city and county offices, while the police building sheltered the Supreme, judicial and municipal courts, in addition to the police department. Adjoining stood the Western Union Knights of Pythias hall, which was in the midst of the city hall when the flames were discovered, but only a few persons were hurt.

The estimated from half to an hour the latter papers in the office of the registrar of deeds, where everything was destroyed, either city departments lost everything, with the exception of the city clerk's and treasurer's offices. One of the most valuable libraries in the United States, the Portland Law Collection, was destroyed, with a loss estimated at $10,000.

The fire originated in the city clerk's office, and was spread by crossed wires, which made it impossible to ring a call for the fire department to turn out of the hotels.

The city hall survived the great fire of 1902, although it was damaged at that time. The building had a frontage of 175 feet and was 200 feet deep, and was three stories and 120 feet above the roof. The building was constructed of Nova Scotia and Albert stone, and contained eighty rooms.

TERRORS OF "TRIAL" INITIATION.

Sorority Ceremonies Shatter Nerves of Novitiate and Arouse Mothers.

The novice ranking, even though fancied, is undergoing a trying ordeal in the hands of the upper classmen of the sorority of girl students in private and preparatory schools in New York City caused a meeting of twenty sorority mothers in the Hotel Marie Antoinette. Their first purpose is to break up the secret organization, if possible, and second to start a campaign throughout the country to root out the secret society mixed girls.

It was the story of Julia Mills, age 17, as told by her to her mother, that caused Mrs. Mills to take the first steps. Julia Mills was "initiated" into the sorority.

Mrs Mills, according to her story, was summoned to appear at the Moore house. When she was ordered in she was led into a dimly lighted room to wait her coming. Then she was led into a room up to the high pressure.

"This will be a test of your fortitude, said to her sister. You are ordered to shoot your lover into a pulp of mashed meat, which you are before you. Ready! Fire! order."

Sue Attorney Gordon Contract.

Dispatches from London report that the Cleveland Bridge and Engineering Company, a British concern, has received from the Spanish government a contract for the construction of a combined road and railway bridge over the Ebro river. The bridge will have the length of waterway to be spanned is 1,700 feet. It is expected that the bridge will be completed by the end of 1908. This is said to be the first contract for large contract ever placed for any part of the African continent.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The Senate Tuesday discussed the propriety of authorizing one of its committees to investigate the circumstances connected with the issuance of an injunction in the case of the Illinois Central and Yazoo Company against John Mitchell, by Judge Alston G. Dayton of the Federal States Circuit Court of the northern district of West Virginia, and the Senate passed a resolution for that purpose adopted, and Senator Bailey thought it should not harass judges in their duties, and he did not favor the resolution unless there was considerable reason for believing that a judge had exceeded his authority. Considerable time was spent in considering the bill to revise the criminal code. At the close of a day of excitement in the House of representatives an amendment was added to the penal code bill making it a misdemeanor for any officer or employee of the government to give out advance information regarding any order or rulings authorized by law to be made by the department. The amendment was by Mr. Burleson of Texas, who made a strong fight against it. It was seconded by Mr. Stanley of Kentucky, with a brief addition by Mr. Olmsted of Pennsylvania, and was accepted.

The Senate spent over an hour Wednesday in discussing a resolution offered by Senator Bailey of Texas, which called directing the Department of Commerce and Labor to make a report of information into the affairs of the International Harvester Company, which was adopted by a resolution over a year ago. During this discussion Senator Bailey said that the "harvester trust" is attempting to control the Republican national convention and is especially hostile to Senator Dolliver, who is in charge of the resolution. The resolution was adopted. The Senate passed the anti-gambling bill and passed the bill to regulate the business of all other business. A surprise was sprung when Chairman Hepburn of the interstate commerce committee moved the numbers that the committee had agreed upon a rate bill providing for a $100,000 fine for the railroad that shall be found guilty of rebating. A discussion on tariff schedules followed, in which Senators Aldrich, who is the leader on both sides of the House, tried to come one of the Senate, but announced as to whether, if success did at the November elections, there would be tariff legislation.

The Senate was not in session Friday. Although the greatest debtedly by the probability of the consideration in the House, not a word pertinent to the bill was spoken. Under the privilege of general debate several members addressed the House on a variety of subjects, but the speech which attracted most attention was a criticism of the Panama canal by Mr. Lassiter, of Virginia, who forecast by him. Charles H. Grosvenor, of Ohio, who was called to take his first numerous House speech, which opened by Mr. Keifer of Ohio, who reported by several other Republicans, who made speeches in the amendments carried Mr. Hinson's two amendments, one authorized two twenty-mill Monday.

Greatly to the surprise of every one the Senate Monday, Seventy-five years ago, the Senate Monday, Seventy-five years ago, the Senate Monday, Seventy-five years ago,

A Plain Duty.

The newspapers of Northern Michigan, with hardly an exception, have been loyal to the Charlevoix sugar factory, because of its intimate relation to agricultural prosperity.

In acknowledgment of the importance of the enterprise, they have been attaching to the farmers' concerning their duty in it. They have been told that without their united co-operation the enterprise must fail. The preachment was as true as gospel, and is still true. Indeed, the best equitable to the success and permanence of the factory depends upon something more than ordinary effort on the part of the farmers.

But we believe there is another duty, upon whose shoulders there rests just as grave a responsibility as that which confronts the farmer. It is one thing to make the sugar, it is another thing to sell it. Competition is lively and even strenuous in the sugar market. Chicago, Detroit and Grand Rapids jobbers and wholesalers are by no means wedded to the West Michigan Sugar Co., but Northern Michigan merchants should be. Loyalty to home institutions should be demonstrated in the purchase by merchants of home products. All other things being equal, we do not see why Charlevoix merchants should not favor goods of home manufacture. Honor bright, we do not know of any. Let that one where this is not done, it has merely been suggested to us in a general way and we believe the suggestion involves the true principle of loyalty to a home industry.

We believe Northern Michigan merchants (and especially those of Charlevoix,) should handle Charlevoix sugar. We believe this duty is secondary only to the duty of the farmer to raise beets with which to make the sugar.

The SENTINEL is a firm believer in the doctrine of protection to home industries, whether it be general or local. We believe in Charlevoix sugar, Charlevoix flour, and Charlevoix labor, whether it be skilled or common; and Charlevoix labor means home industry and home products.

Uncle Sam's Orders.

The postmaster general has issued a radical order in relation to the news papers that went into effect Jan. 1, 1908.

Amended section 436 reads as follows: "A reasonable time will be allowed publishers to secure renewals of subscriptions, but unless subscriptions are expressly renewed, after the term for which they are paid, within the following periods—weeklies within one year—they shall not be counted in the legitimate list of subscribers and copies mailed on account thereof shall not be accepted for mailing at the second class postage rate of 1 cent a pound, but may be mailed at the transient second class postage rate of 1 cent for each four ounces or fraction thereof, prepaid with stamps affixed. The right of a publisher to extend credit for subscriptions to his publication is not denied or questioned, but his compliance or non-compliance with the regulation will be taken into consideration in determining whether the publication is entitled to transmission at the second class postage rates."

This makes it necessary for the publisher to collect subscription arrears at once, and, likewise necessary within the next month to discontinue all subscriptions not paid.

Will delinquent subscribers please take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Late Events.

Another horrible regicide was added to the list last Friday, when King Carlos, of Portugal, and his eldest son, the crown prince, were assassinated by a band of anarchists. The younger son, Manuel, who is now King, was wounded. The three with the queen were in a carriage on their way to the palace, when six men approached the royal carriage, drew carbines from under their cloaks and did the deed. The new King is but 18, but promises well.

President Roosevelt's special message to Congress last week, recommending legislation to curb trusts and abolish corrupt practicing, was a bomb-shell in the camp of the enemy, and probably has caused more comment than any executive communication to the Congress since the declaration of independence. It was a brave, clear-cut exhaustive arraignment of corporate "bad actors" and of "Congress has declared its purpose to carry out the president's wishes.

Secretary Taft has captured Ohio right out from under Foraker's nose. Every day Judge Taft is gaining strength, and his nomination is all ready a foregone conclusion.

THE LEGEND.
Of Ed Dos e gs, or How Petoskey Got its Name.

By Socrates in St. Ignace Enterprise.

Once upon a time many years ago the writer was talking with an old Indian chief. He was not chief hereditary right, but only by force of character and ability; and happening to speak the name Petoskey I was very promptly corrected and told that the proper way to pronounce it was Ho-dos e-ga. The old man said, "Wait, I will tell you the story of Ho-dos e-ga."

"Many long years ago, before I was, and my father was not yet, a powerful chief with his band lived near what now called Petoskey, and this band were at war always with a band of Mennonites who lived at Black Wigwam (Green Bay).

"Now this chief had only one child, a strong minded young women, who always acted as chief when her father was away. As they were about preparing to go on the war path the old man called her to him to give her instructions.

"As it was quite possible some enemy might attack the remnant of the band while he and his fighting men were away, he instructed her to conduct the band to a little lake near by in which was an island, camping on the island and destroying all their canoes but one, and guarding that herself for fear of treachery in the camp.

"She was further instructed in the event of the appearance of an enemy or apparent danger for her little band to erect the lodge for incantations and to call on him through the spirits at once. He said: 'As soon as you call I will come.'

"The daughter carried out his instructions exactly, and for a time they were secure; but by some means, either in a fog or during the night, the two parties on the warpath, one from the west and one from the east, passed each other on the lake without knowing it and the shores of the little lake soon resounded with war whoops and the clamor of a war party anxious for scalps. They did not attempt to attack, trusting starvation to bring the band to terms, after which such torture, butchery and possibly cannibalistic feats as the Indians of those days knewonly too well how to inflict, would result.

"At last the princess thought it time to call on her father, fearing the enemy would build rafts and so reach them before long. So she ordered the 'spirit lodge' to be erected on the beach, looking to the west.

"These lodges are somewhat peculiar. They are built usually of small maple or birch poles, the butt end pushed into the ground far enough so they will stand firmly; then the tops are bent over and lashed, forming a frame about five to seven feet in diameter and about the same height, the top perfectly round; the frame is then covered with birch-bark 'puck-waw' or mats, lashed on, leaving a small hole at the top for the conjurer, or medicine man to enter. The conjurer may lie either a man or a woman, but in this case it was the princess herself.

"The incantation commenced with a chant, sometimes loud, sometimes low; soon voices are heard, various, different. The lodge is violently shaken, thus giving evidence of the presence of the spirits to bystanders, or whom there is always a crowd. Soon the princess emerged from the lodge assuming the anxious spectators that she had communicated with her father and he would shortly be with them.

This lodge having been erected by her direction near the beach, she stands near the water's edge with her arms folded looking in the direction she expects help from. Ho-dos e-ga! Ho-dos e-ga!" literally, he comes a flying, he comes a flying! and a large bird is seen coming rapidly from the west, alighting alongside of his daughter and immediately assuming its own proper human form. It is her father, and the siege is soon raised and the enemy driven away with great slaughter.

"And the chief was known as Ho-dos e-ga ever after, and the family retain the name to this day."

Sufferer & Sufferer Saved.

E. S. Loper, of Marilla, N. Y., says: "I am a carpenter and have had many father, and the siege is soon raised and the enemy driven away with great slaughter.

Gaylord has an epidemic of infectious diseases. Measles and smallpox were succeeded by scarlet fever and diphtheria and no attempt was made to isolate the patients until many were exposed. One child died without medical attendance and one woman of scarlet fever.

Petoskey News: E. E. Gilbert informs the News that he is in receipt of a letter from a representative of Andrew Carnegie at Hoboken, N. J., stating that the sum of $12,500 has been appropriated by Mr. Carnegie for the building of a library in this city. This amount is available for use for that purpose at any time and can be used as fast as the work on the building progresses.

The Antrim County Agricultural society was revived and reorganized at a mass gathering of enthusiastic farmers and business men assembled at the court house at Bellaire one day last week and steps taken that insure the holding of a county fair this fall. The county has for several years expended several hundred dollars in advertising and in the exhibition of products at the State and West Michigan fairs, under direction of the board of supervisors with such satisfactory results as to justify the belief that a county exhibition will be a success. The society owns grounds at Bellaire and had at one time as fine a race track as was in Northern Michigan.

Chebogan Tribune: Last Thursday evening in the parlors of the Spencer House, an auxiliary of the Lake Michigan Commercial Fishermen's association was organized by Wilber K. Campbell, of Northport, who is also editor and publisher of the Lake Fisherman, a monthly publication in the interest of the fishermen of the Great Lakes. The following officers were elected and the organization starts out very auspicious; and a great deal of good will be forthcoming from their united efforts: Pres. Chas. E. Corlette; Secretary, John Olmstead; Treasurer, W. D. Chapman. This branch starts out with about 25 charter members, a preliminary meeting being held Monday evening in the council room through the courtesy of the mayor and was largely attended. Another meeting will be held next Monday evening when all fishermen and others interested in this industry are cordially invited to attend. It is expected that the membership will reach 50

The Jumping off Place.

"Comments had not lie the grape and I had almost reached the jumping off place when I was advised to try Dr. King's New Discovery; and I want to say right now, it saved my life. Improvement began with the first bottle, and after taking one dozen bottles I was a well and happy man again, says George Moore, of Grimes land, N. C. As a remedy for coughs and colds and healer of weak, sore lungs and for preventing pneumonia New Discovery is supreme. 50c and $1.00 at F. G. Hines & Co. druggist. Trial bottle free.

Warning in Time.

In his desire to use fine language, the darky of the south frequently alters his ideas to become a trifle confused, as well as confusing. A handbill announcing a "colored play" to be held in Grove near Mobile was once freely circulated. After various enticing announcements concerning the delights in store for the partakers in this entertainment, the bill concluded with the following perplexing notice, printed in italics: "Dere is no danger of de entertainment being enjoyed upon all present, and nuthin will be left unbroken. Ladies will tend de sick in dis industry, and gentlemen will be ushered out de free as was intended."

Local News.

—Willis Kelts and wife, of Flint, are in town visiting friends last Sunday.

—Master Robert Bridge, who has been very critically ill the past two weeks, is improving, and an early recovery is looked for.

—A very slippery time came Wednesday, leaving the ground bare in many places, and seriously damaging the roads for sleighing.

—Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Hoxie went to Traverse City Monday. They were called there owing to the critical illness of Mr. Hoxie's mother—Mrs. Burns.

—Saturday morning was the coldest of this year at this place. The mercury registered 12 below zero. At Lake Junior the government thermometer registered 18 below.

—Dr. Armstrong is gaining in strength rapidly, and Tuesday was out for a short sleigh ride. The Mayor will soon be able to preside over the council at least, and will be in his office in ten days or two weeks.

—Dr. and Mrs. L. H. Bartlett, gave another of their popular sinker evening parties Friday at the home of the latter. About 100 people were present, and after a repast, dancing and cards contributed to a most pleasant social time.

—Several of our citizens who went at the Traverse City banquet Tuesday night went from there to Grand Rapids Wednesday to attend the Ladies' Auxiliary. Among them were John Mayre, S. A. Keating, F. H. Holdsworth, N. H. Washburn and Dan Shaughnessy.

—The county treasurer received from his temporary quarters in the Clark building to his old room in the court house. The contractors have their work well along, and in another week or ten days all the county officers will be settled in their offices ready for business before the tax paying time.

—F. H. Breck returned from the Traverse City chicken show Saturday loaded down with ribbons of all colors and sizes, first on pen, first and second on cock birds, first on cockerel, first and second on pullets, and second and third on hens. All this indicates that Mr. Breck has the best exhibit of birds at the show.

—Mark Twain said at a banquet recently that it "pays to advertise." When pens are sent to a second newspaper in Virginia City, Nev., a subscriber wrote in and said that he was not a regular present subscriber to the sheets of this paper. Is this good or bad luck? asked the subscriber, in his "Answers to Correspondents." The next day Mr. Twain replied in these words: "The footing of a solder in your copy of the Enterprise was neither good luck nor bad. The spider was merely taking a view over your place to find out what it can do for you if advertising, so that you might spin its web across the door and hold a free and undisturbed claimant forever after."

This Beaver Island mail came over to Cross Village Saturday and returned Saturday.

Married, at the M. E. parsonage, Wednesday evening last, by Rev. H. A. Wriggs, Mr. Geo. Ayers and Miss Eva Smith, both of this city.

There will be an afternoon tea at the residence of Mrs. John Doherty, on Bluffport avenue, Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 12, for benefit of St. Mary's school.

Capt. F. D. Campbell returned home from his southern Michigan trip yesterday, arriving at Traverse City Tuesday night to take in the Lincoln Club banquet.

John Dillmar and family left Tuesday for Dunkirk, N. Y., where they expect to reside. Mr. Dillmar's parents already residing there. His son and family move in already there.

The fire season has begun in earnest, and the east of Pine Lake is swarming with men and teams in the work of putting up the many hundreds of cords of wood that are required. It is stated that sixty men are engaged in the work, and it will probably last this month.

At the Morse, who won two world's championship medals at Pittsburg this winter, as a roller skater, is booked for a guest of his uncle, Sam Hamilton, and will be with us about the middle of the month. He will remain here this week and then proceed to St. Louis, where he has an engagement.

Hon. Geo. L. Oliver, Select Court of Grand Traverse county, will deliver an address upon Abraham Lincoln at the Annual Lincoln Day Anniversary, of the Charlevoix Historical Society, Friday evening, Feb. 14th at Hotel Antrim. Banquet at 7 o'clock. Tickets on sale at Chepel's Drug Store.

Dr. F. A. Snipe, of this city, will leave next week for Lansing, Mich., where he has accepted a position as surgeon for the Northern Pacific R. R. Co. There are very many people in Charlevoix who regret the departure of Dr. Snipe, but who wish him minimum success in his new field of professional labor. Dr. Snipe is especially well equipped in his profession. He is a young man of great integrity, unusual ability and skilful, and is bound to make his mark wherever he is.

The W. C. T. U. will meet on Friday, Feb. 14th at 2:30 p. m. at the home of Mrs. John Inness. Program at 3 p. m., topic, "Social Purity," leader, Mrs. Ivers; Scripture lesson and prayer, Mrs. L. A. E. Gent; Song, Mrs. Agnes Jarvis.

—The next number of the Lecture Course will occur Monday evening, the 24th inst. Leland Powers, the greatest impersonator in the world will fill that number. He will render Ireland Garden. Notice the following from a St. Hilier president of the Yale University Extension Course: "Your work is satisfactory, critical and spectacular in our University Extension Course was one of the finest pieces of character acting which I have ever seen. The laughs and applause in the play were retained with none of the condescending critic used in a literary production. I know of no one better fitted and qualified to give a standard drama and plays to an intellectual audience than yourself."

Traverse City Record: Articles of incorporation of the Walton Lake Lumber company, of Traverse City, Leelanau county, were filed Friday with the Secretary of State. The company has a capitalization of $25,000, with a paid up capital stock of $12,000. The stockholders are Ralph Cross, of Kingsley, Joseph O. Crotser, of Traverse City, Robert F. Boughey, also of Traverse City, and John Grant, of Hope City.

Traverse City Record: Grand Traverse lay has nearly succumbed to the icy fetters and only a narrow strip of water this side of Marion island keeps the bay from being entirely bound in ice. For some time the ice has been in evidence out from bottom bay, and also out from Bowers Harbor, so that communication with Northport left to freeze during the last hold of cold weather. Last night the cold, still air was so that it allowed not the free ice was comparatively quiet.

Fagan's Warehouse Destroyed by Fire.

Fagan's dock warehouse was destroyed by fire at eleven o'clock Saturday night with its contents. In it were stored six gangs of nets, mostly new, belonging to Mike Green, a buggy owned by Meyer, of Meyer & Neubert, and one owned by Burt Beaudoin. For a time buildings on Bridge street were in extreme danger. The Fagan building, used as a vaudeville, caught fire in the rear, and burned through the roof, but there was very little damage by fire, water and debris put the vaudeville out of commission for a time. Meyer & Neubert's saloon caught fire in the rear but was promptly extinguished.

Fortunately there was no wind. Had the easterly wind that prevailed Friday come up Saturday night a most disastrous fire must have resulted.

Although the fire department did splendid work, it was handicapped by delay in getting there. As a matter of fact the city has no fire alarm. The big bell on the water tower is not in commission owing to trouble with the electric lines, and the eight hours bill has not been restored since the fire that put it out of use. It is hoped that steps will be taken immediately to supply the city with an efficient alarm. The loss on Fagan's warehouse is partly covered by insurance, on the vaudeville building it was fully covered. The heaviest loser is John Green. There were six gangs of nets destroyed. They were valued at $5,000. Insured for $2,000.

The Grand Traverse Lincoln Club Banquet.

One of the most notable political events in the history of the Grand Traverse region was the Lincoln Club banquet at Traverse City Tuesday night. Primarily it is a subscription republican dinner, yet it came about that republicans brought together the representative republicans of Northern Michigan, and was in all respects a most auspicious success.

Fully five hundred occupied the elegantly appointed tables in the big city Opera House. Charlevoix was very much in evidence, not only in the large number attending from this city, but was highly honored by having its distinguished citizen, Hon. F. W. Mayne as president of the club.

The Judge opened the post prandial program by a speech that made his friends proud of him.

Another Charlevoix feature was the male quartet from this city, composed of S. A. Keating, Dr. Frank Wilkinson, Harold Hampton and Gale Hines. They sang several selections, and received hearty applause and many compliments.

The after speakers—Congressman Townsend, of Michigan, Senator Clay Smith and Legislator, of South Carolina—delivered masterly addresses. We regret that the hour of our paper's issue prevents a more extended review of the event.

Late General Events.

At the Ohio primaries Tuesday Wm. H. Taft captured the state for the presidency, and has every delegate to the National convention, this eliminates senator Foraker completely from any further prominence in Ohio.

Bob Evans and his big ships are in the Pacific steaming north, and will be in Cuiro, Peru, tomorrow night.

MADE A MISTAKE.

A Texas Thug Fails to an Attempt to Hold Up a Charlevoix Girl.

Everybody in Charlevoix knows J. A. Cameron, a pioneer of Charlevoix, and in his day, as lusty a man physically, as ever came from brawny Scotch ancestry. He has a daughter, born in Charlevoix, and now happily married at Fort Worth, Texas. She not only inherited the agility of her dad, but was carefully trained by him in the "quickest get out and defense." How well the justified her training is shown by the following account from a Fort Worth paper:

"Last night just after dark Mrs. W. J. Taylor started from her home, 112 Ireland street, to the Eagle bakery on South Main street, in which her husband is employed as night foreman.

"About a short distance from the bakery, as she went to turn the corner, she was attacked by a man. The man grabbed for her pocketbook, which she carried in her left hand, but Mrs. Taylor seized as the man with a grip about as most men's hand with the right hand she began to pound the man in the face. The fellow turned loose and ran. Mrs. Taylor then went her way to the bakery and reported the matter to her husband. She was not at all frightened, though after the encounter seemed a little nervous.

"After waiting about twelve hours she picked the police about the matter. They have no clue and Mrs. Taylor could give a very indefinite description of the party, as it was very dark. She says her purse contained only a small sum, but that she didn't want to leave that behind from her she could help herself."

Her dad, Alex., can now about 70 years and he is big red apple that he can throw any man of his weight in Charlevoix.

CHASED BY WOLVES.

Joseph Shores of This City Had An Exciting Experience.

"Joe" Shores, of this city, is home from the Northern Peninsula in order to get acquainted with his family. He is an employee of the Charlevoix Lumber Co. in its lumber camp on the Two Heart river, 35 miles from Newberry.

One day last week Joe and Wm. Dougherty Jr., also of this city, started out on foot from the camp for Newberry, on their way home. They were about half way on their journey when they heard the howl of a pack of wolves. They had no weapons but an axe, and they were naturally somewhat "skeered."

The wolves gained on them, and they were forced to climb trees to save their skins. There were nine of the devil, and they were vicious. After vain attempts to reach the men, they scattered, and Joe and his companion come down and proceeded on their journey to Newberry.

They soon reached the main road, along which the homes of settlers were more numerous, and the wolves disappeared.

Joe says wolves destroy more deer in that region in one winter than all the hunters get during the open season. After a thaw, when there is a crust on the snow, it is no uncommon thing to find half a dozen skeletons of deer in the woods where the wolves have overtaken deer and killed them.

The Shore Railroad Project.

From the Traverse City Record.

According to the action of the board of directors of the board of trade in a meeting called some months ago for the purpose of furthering the Traverse City street railway and interurban railway proposition, President Jno. R. Santo has appointed a committee of seven to take charge of the matter of raising the necessary funds under the proposition of the Carter Construction company. The committee consists of J. W. Hannen, W. H. Unson, W. W. Smith

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

The meeting just described took place upon a Thursday, early in November, and the Saturday Eliza Girdlestone had fully made up his mind to turn his book upon the diggings and begin his long-delayed journey. He was waiting for the pleasure of his old London life, and was weary of the prospect glare of the South African sun. His task was done, too, and it would be well for him to be at a distance before the digger discovered the manner in which he had been deceived. Refugees to pack his kists, therefore, and to make every preparation for his departure.

He was busily engaged in this employment upon the Wednesday evening when there was a tap at the door and Farrish took upon himself to announce that Mr. Willmore Girdlestone glanced up at the clock, and grumbled, then briefly, I'm not surprised at their visit, for they had over twenty-one several times before the great prizes or make arrangements. For Farrish knew that the Girdlestones, Rochfords, and Williams resided his hardly-fought-for prize money was coming.

"We looked in, Mr. Girdlestone," Frederick begins, in fierce if you had anything to say."

"I told you before that I had not, Eliza and Lucy Girdlestone. "I am going to dine. I have another engagement." I'm sorry, sir, but this is serious." Lucy begins in her low and sweet voice.

"I say sorry to hear that," and Farrish took unsympathetically. "Maybe the matter will wait."

"Let us hope so," the merchant answered. "It doesn't look like it."

Quick as a flash Hurt sprang upon him and seized his arm with a fierce oath. "Where's a gasping cry and a heavy thud Eyes fell face downwards upon the floor a green mist in his head

"Very most—very pretty indeed," cried the ex-convict, in a quiet tone of critical satisfaction, as a connoisseur might speak of a specimen which interested him. "Well done, Mr. Hurt, well done!" cried Williams in a quivering voice.

"Here are the scenes," said Farrish, in the same quiet voice. "Here are some coins and gold. We may as well leave them, too. Now, the the bag carefully. That's the way. If we meet any one on the stairs, take it easily. Now, sir, I'm ready, Williams, see that if any one looks in he'll see nothing. Come along!" The crippled thief and the ex-convict, bearing their plunder with them, and walked down the stairs of the hotel quietly and unknown.

The moon as it rose over the well that night shone on three lonesome wayfarers. It along the Cape town road as they their very lives depended upon their speed. Its calm, clear rays streamed over the silent roofs of Kimberley and its through a gorgeous window of the Orange Hotel, throwing silvery patches upon the curtains and casting strange shadows from the figures upon which lay as it had fallen hushed to an ungainly lump upon the floor.

CHAPTER IX.

Kara was unknown to such rare vivality, which enabled him not only to shake off the effects of his mishap, but to do so in an extraordinary short space of time. There was a scene from the grounds for, there, a feeble movement, then another and a cry of joy, and, finally, he raised himself upon his elbow, he looked around him in a bewildered way, with his sound head pressed to the wound at the back of his head, from which a few minutes ago the ribbon of blood were still meandering. His glance wandered vaguely over the table and the chairs and the walls, and it rested upon the sofa. He could see in the moonlight that it was empty, and empty. In a moment the whole scheme flashed across him in a few minutes he he staggered to the bell with a hoarse cry of rage and despair.

Whenever Kara's faults may have been, irresolution or want of courage was not among them. In a moment he grasped the situation, and realized that it was absolutely essential that he should act, and at once. The stones must be removed, or utter and irretrievable ruin stared him in the face. He rushed out of the room, and called for his hat and several attendants, white and black, came rushing into the room.

"You have rung, Baas, and we have come," said, steadying himself against the mantelpiece, for he was still weak and giddy. "Thus" all start cackling, but do what ask you. Light the lamps."

The lamp was lit, and there was a murmur from the little band of subjects, to enforced by some late lounges at the bar as they saw the disorderly room and the great crimson patch upon the carpet.

"The thieves rifled my safe," said Kara, trembling violently, but collectively. "They minus Farrish, and Hurt and Williams." "It is now half-past ten, so they have no very great start. You, Jimbombo, and you, Van Jobling, go out and get three men down here seen setting off. Perhaps they took a buggy, and we can down and soft-footed. You, Johnny, go are hand to a gang of Kaffirs. Tell them there has been robbery and attempted murder, and that there is a half a dozen of his best mounted men—Tell them to bring their rifles and their horses. I shall see that he is not there if he is anywhere." Johnny ran away. "Boys, get my horse saddled and bring him round. Be quick! Tell Jim to catch anything in Griqualand."

As Kara gave his orders the men hastened off on different directions to carry them out. He himself, supported by the cane he took a long and a leaderchief tightly round his neck.

"Surely you are not going, sir," the landlord said. "You are not fit."

"Fit or not, I am going," Kara said resolutely. "If I have to be strapped to my horse I'll go."

A great connoisseur of people had assembled by this time, attracted to the vicinity of the robbery. The whole square by from all the hotels, as crowded with diggers and storekeepers and assistants. Mr. Kafferbell, still prowling up to the portico in the hope of hearing some fresh details. There was a loud cheer when Kara appeared on the crowd when Kara appeared on the stage of the hotel, looking very pale and weak, with a bandaged bound round his head and his collar all crumpled with the crowd when Kara appeared on the stage of the hotel, looking very pale and weak, with a bandaged bound round his head and his collar all crumpled with his encounter rushed to him.

"If you please, sir," he said, "they have taken the Kimberley road. A dozen people saw them. Their horses were not up in much, for I knew the man they got from. You are sure to catch them."

"Well, I'm edged over Kara's pale face, which looked little good for the fugitives. "Some people—and I am their power going to come?"

"Why, they are," said the landlord, and some enough, with a jingling of arms and a clatter of hoofs, half a dozen men in Cape Mounted police trotted through the crowd and drew up in front of the door. They smart, active jaunty fellows, armed with carbine and sabre, not their horses were sturdy, strong, unmanly to look at, but with wonderful staying power. Kara noted the fact with satisfaction as he rode up to the grizzled sergeant.

"There's not a moment to be lost, sergeant," he said. "They have an hour and a half's start, but their carts are not up to much speed. It's the Clapworth road."

"A hundred pounds if we catch them!"

For the first few miles the party galloped in silence. The moon was still shining, brilliant, and they could see the white line of the road stretching away in front of them and winding away over the undulating ridge. To right and left spread a broad expanse of silvery glimmer, broken by the hollows, with her bosom and scrub scattered over it in patches.

To right and left spread a broad expanse of silvery glimmer, broken by the hollows, with her bosom and scrub scattered over it in patches.

Out once more upon the Capetown road, Kara rode hard between the pursuers and the pursued. The former knew that the fugitives, were it daylight, would probably be within sight of them, and the thought gave them additional ardor. The sergeant had heard a fresh horse rode in rear, his head down and his body forward, and gave every possible inch of pace out of the animal. At his heels came Kara, on the Kimberley road, the blackness of his handkerchief fluttering from his head. He was suffering great pain from his wound, with a set, stern smile upon his face. In front of the party, a little ahead, rode a mounted sentry, or as behind them the men remained with their horses, ready to mount at a moment's notice.

A mounted sentry or as behind them the men remained with their horses, ready to mount at a moment's notice, watching hard with white and sore eyes the shadows that lay over the road. Away in the east a long low cloud was low upon the horizon, and the moon was approaching, and a gray light stole over the hardy faces. Dawn was approaching, and the horses must be saved.

"I say, sergeant," said Kara, in a low voice, "I say, sergeant, we shall have to lose up." There's some one coming up towards us." "Let them come."

Eyes and the trooper, latched their pistols, and the party, with the exception of two, then saw a solitary horseman riding down the road. The horse was tired, and the rider might possibly be one of the fugitives who had turned back to see what was the matter. They guessed that it was a stranger. His clothes were so dusty and his face so covered with dust and sweat that it was evident that he also had rode a good long distance.

"Have you seen three men—one—two—and a—fat man?" the trooper asked.

"Yes," said the man, "I have seen three men."

"Which way?" the sergeant cried.

"I am bringing news from Jagersfontein," the man said.

"Which way?" Kara interrupted, furious, and the man stared at him with a vague, stupid, bewildered look in his eyes.

"Jagersfontein," he said, at last, and the sergeant shrieked in the frenzy of his disappointment. The men and the others followed as best they heard for a dull rattling sound like the rattling of a distant cannon, and the "Jagersfontein." cried Kara, and the troop, the sergeant, and the men, and the troopers, too, understood the significance of the sound.

It was a well lonely spot, where the plain was bare right to the horizon, and which usually covered it. Here and there great patches of ground, illuminated the brown and as though Nature's covering had in bygone days been torn from the bare ground. Here and there the ground sound. As Kara and the sergeant rode down the road they saw some little way ahead of them the men, the men, enveloped in a cloud of dust. Almost at the same moment they saw a shower of stones and clods behind them, and, looking round, saw a confused heap upon the ground. The horse of the leading trooper had fallen from some fatigue, and had rolled over upon its rider. The other trooper had dismounted, and was endeavoring to extricate his comrade.

"Let us see if he is hurt," the sergeant cried.

"Pull on!" shouted Kara, whose passion was increased by the sight of the chiefs. "Not a foot back."

"He may have broken his neck," groaned the sergeant, unwilling to leave his comrade. "Have your pistol ready, sir. We shall be on with him in a few minutes." Kara he staggered to the bell with a hoarse cry of rage and despair.

GOLD COINS.

Why Bankers Don't Like Them and Prefer to Handle Paper.

"Of the different kinds of American money now in circulation the gold coins of all denominations are the least disliked in my business," said a prominent New York banker.

"Take a greenback, a silver or a gold certificate or a national bank note to your credit without a moment's delay. Not so with gold. A few days ago a gentleman brought in our cash upward of $2,000 in gold of different denominations and was much provoked because we wanted our receive it and give him credit with the amount of the face of the coin represented. This we could not do because the law requires that gold shall be reckoned only at its actual value. Coins carried in the pocket for any length of time naturally lose something by abrasion—probably not a fractional part of a cent on a two dollar piece, but it is a loss nevertheless—and therefore bankers cannot give credit for gold deposits until the coin shall have been weighed. In the case mentioned my friend took his gold to the subtreasury and was compelled to wait three days longer than he had to get notes for it.

"Every coin had to be passed through the scales, and after the weighing process had been completed three of the silver—five dollar pieces and a ten dollar piece—were returned to him as short in value. Before returning short weight coins the department stamps on the face of each coin a cross. The owner is either left to mutilate the coins in the United States mint for redemption at cents on the dollar, or to circulate. Eventually the coins with crosses on their faces will go to the mint and be redeemed at their actual value. In many instances there may not be more than several cents' shortage on $50 worth of coins. Business men, however, naturally object to the inconvenience and put rid of their gold as fast as possible."—New York Press.

KEATS ON MARRIAGE.

Barrier Against Matrimony in Which the Poet Rejoiced.

Notwithstanding your happiness and your recommendation, I hope I shall not marry. Though the most beautiful creature were waiting for me at the end of a journey or a walk, though the crispest wine of life, the curtains of the morning clouds, the chaics and sofas filled with organic down, the food manna, the wine beyond clared, the whole opening on Whitsunday morning, I should not feel, or, rather, my happiness seems not be so true, so big, solid, and sublime. Then, instead of what I have described, there is a solitary hackney to undertake me home. The rattling of the wheel is my wife, and the stars through the window game are my children. The mighty architect lies a heap of beauty in all things either the more divided and minute domestic happiness—an amiable wife and sweet children I contemplate as a part of that beauty, but I must have a thousand of those beautiful particles to fill up my heart.

I feel more and more every day as my imagination strengthens that I do not live in this world alone, but in a thousand worlds. No sooner am I alone than shapes of wide greatness are stationed around me and serve my spirit the office which is equivalent to a king's bodyguard—then "tragedy with her sceptered pall comes sweeping by." According to my state of mind I am with Achilles shouting in the trenches or with Theocritus in the vales of Sicily, or I throw my whole being into Troilus, and, repeating those lines, I wonder like a lost soul upon the Stygian banks, staying for waftage." I melt into the air with a languishment so delicate that I am content to be nothing. These things, contrasted with the opinion I have of the generality of women, who appear to me as children to whom I would rather give a sugar plum than my time, form a barrier against matrimony which I require to be "Pleasa of John Keats," by Walter Raleigh.

Something More Interesting.

The old darky was having his eyes tested for glasses. After the oculist put up several cards of Roman letters, which the negro vainly endeavored to call off correctly, he looked over at the oculist and asked, with some disgust:

"What's de use in lookin' at dem things?

"With them I'm trying to find out how for you can see distinctly," returned the eye specialist.

"Wait," decimed the old darky, unsatisfied, "dey ain't worth trying. I make out, I'm up er waterwillion."—Bohemian.

The Origin of the Holy Stone.

At the reformation, when the Church of St. Nicholas at Yarmouth was despoiled, the carved statues of many of the monuments both in the church and outside in the graveyard, were shipped off, some to Norwich to be turned into grindstones and some on board the ships of the royal navy of the day to be used in scouring the decks, where, it is interesting to know, the picturesque term "holystoning the deck" takes its origin.—London Standard.

Holes as Mesmerists.

Like the squirrel and some other animals, the mole lays up a store of food during the autumn months. Troubles of an Amateur.

"I thought you had gone to raising bees," said the man from the city. "I don't see any sign of them around here."

"I had half a dozen colonies of the finest bees I could get," answered the amateur bee-keeper, "and a whole library of literature on the subject. But they swarmed one day, and while I was looking the cook my bees to find out what was the proper thing to do when bees swarm and the blamed things flew away, and I've never seen 'em since."—Chicago Tribune.

ONLY NATIONAL CANDIDATE.

Ohio Has in Taft One Fine and Winning Chance to Furnish the Next President.

Seventy Michigan Republicans, strong and influential enough to be chosen delegates to the convention which is revising the constitution of their state, have come out on the question of their party's choice of a leader in the coming national campaign. Their verdict is a blast which every Republican in Ohio who claims big state to furnish the next president ought to heed.

Only five refused to toll their preference. Of the 65 who voted, 44 were for Taft, 16 were divided among Hughes, Cannon, Root, Cortelyou and Lafolette. Taft beat the field two to one. Foraker was not mentioned. Neither was Fairbanks.

Here is the voice of a strong Republican state which has no candidate of its own. It is not geographic. It throws which makes Michigan want Taft. He lives by the same city as Foraker. Fairbanks is closer to Michigan than Cincinnati is. Cannon, also, is nearer the Michigan boundary. He is at home. Lafolette is just across lake Michigan.

Michigan is for Taft for the same reasons which make Ohio the only national candidate of his party. Michigan is for the man who is for President Roosevelt's policies and principles. Michigan is in favor of pulling the biggest man in the party, its most commanding figure, with Theodore Roosevelt out of the question at the head of the Republican ticket.

It is Taft or no Ohioan, in the view of representative Michigan Republicans. It is the same everywhere Ohio has a sure chance—a fine and winning one—to furnish the next president. That one chance is the nomination of William Howard Taft.—Toledo Register.

WHAT HE WANTED.

Even friends of Senator Foraker with find difficulty in understanding why he now objects to a primary election, when only a few weeks ago he said he wanted a primary and would be satisfied with the result. The official call of the state committee for the primary personal assay and political assay, which he refused to be bound by in advance of the publication of the call, he said he would be bound by it on the publication of the call. Now he says he wanted a primary with a facility that is unparalleled. We are for Secretary of War W. H. Taft for president.—Caldwell, O., Journal.

There is no excuse for doubting or misinterpreting the attitude of Judge Taft on any of the leading issues. He is in line with his party's most advanced position, whether the money question, the tariff question, the railroad question, the trust question or the question of expansion, is coming up. And his ability and his experience in office are sufficient guarantees that as president he would run his furrows, if according to the party's chart, in a way to give the country the full benefit of his best powers.—Washington Star.

WHAT IS OBJECTION?

Foraker's Old Personal Organ Says Primary Call Entirely Complies With Senator's Request.

Cincinnati Commercial Tribune Declares All Republicans Are Given Fair and Equal Opportunity, and Provisions in Call Are Necessary for Protection of All.

For many years the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune has been the one prominent newspaper organ of Senator Joseph B. Foraker that could always be depended upon to espouse the cause of the senior senator. Its loyalty in this respect has been proverbial.

After carefully studying the call of the Republican state central committee for the state convention, with its provisions for the election of delegates from each county at direct and fair primaries, the Commercial Tribune declares the call to be exactly what Senator Foraker asked for in his letter to State Chairman Walter Brown.

In discussing the call the Commercial Tribune, in a leading editorial under the caption "What is Objection?" says:

Acted on Foraker's Request.

What objection is to be found to the action of the state central committee directing the holding of a primary election in Ohio for the purpose of ascertaining the preference of the Republicans of Ohio for a candidate for president? Under the call of the committee, it could be demonstrated that every qualified voter in the state, regardless of any present, ward, township, village, city or county, would be afforded the privilege of freedom of expression, of the adoption of any resolution he desired and the primary would defeat the object for which Senator Foraker asserted he is entitled when he requested the committee to take the necessary steps looking to ascertaining the preference of the Republicans of Ohio for a candidate for president. Under the call of the committee, the first officially formed request from a gentleman who was seeking the nomination for the presidency was from Senator Foraker and it contained the specific request:

"Let the committee, with announcements previously made, respectfully request the legislature of Ohio to provide a primary election law for the state of Ohio, which shall be the sole method of nomination of candidates for state offices, and which shall provide for the direct primary election of delegates to that convention with the statutes of the state applicable thereto."

Objections Purely Technical.

In response, the state central committee has issued the formal call for the holding of the primaries on Feb. 11, for the ascertainment of the preference of the Republican voters of Ohio for a candidate for the highest office in the gift of the people. The call for the primary election was so framed that the mode and the manner of ascertaining that preference would be agreed upon by the state committee had not been specific in formulating the necessary details of the primary. It would have been necessary to have called a special meeting of the committee for the purpose of adopting

According to Receiver John Hately's report on the Zion City industries, which has just been filed in the United States District Court in Chicago, a profit is being made in the operation of the various plants under the receivership. A gross gain of $143,241.86 is shown in earnings over expenditures for the period intervening from between July 27, 1906, and Dec. 31, 1907. The gross earnings were $1,213,428.92, and total expenditures of $1,070,187.06. Taxes, insurance and the operating expenses of the industries amounted to $128,826. The leading net earnings of $101,153.23. The profit on the operations by Marshall Field & Co. netted the receiver $76,000. The total price paid was $1,000,000, as the sum mentioned in the contract for purchase of mortgages on real estate and other items.

DELAYS THAW RELEASE WRIT.

Attorney Littleton Opposes Suggestion to Attempt Freeing Slayer.

Action for the release of Harry K. Thaw from the Matteawan asylum is not likely for at least a month. It is said that Martin W. Littleton, Thaw's chief counsel, will go on a vacation and probably will be absent at least two or three weeks. Mr. Littleton has taken a very active part in the trial, and is said to be in need of rest. It is said that he is opposed to any immediate attempt to secure the release of his client. The mere fact that he is one of the king's counsels would prevent the association. Immediately after the verdict had been rendered, however, the police returned with a volley and killed three of them.

HEAVY LOSS AT BUFFALO.

Fire Caused by Explosion of Gas Leads to $200,000 Damage.

The explosion of a gas engine in the Merchants and Shippers' warehouse on Perry and Prospect streets, Buffalo, N. Y., at a late hour caused about $200,000 damage and the injury of a fireman. The flames soon spread to the adjoining five-story warehouse of the Buffalo Cooperage Company, filled with the dense volume of smoke pouring from the building on three sides and by the heaps of stave blocking the streets. Paul Yaney, a fireman, was overcome by smoke and blood. Daniel Reidy was thrown from a ladder and severely injured.

PORTUGAL'S KING AND CROWN PRINCE SHOT

Attempt Made in Streets of Lisbon to Wipe Out Dynasty by Murdering Reigning Family.

Whole Populace Aroused by Brutal Repression, and Capital of Little Nation Is in Turmoil.

REGICIDES SLAIN BY GUARDS.

Mother Throws Herself in Front of Heir to Throne, Trying to Shield His Body from Bullets.

There were many evidences that the plot to kill Portugal's monarch had been planned to the minutest detail. King Carlos had been warned of his danger and an extra strong escort was in attendance. The fact that the assassins easily outwitted this company gave rise to rumors of treachery, but no substantiation is obtainable.

King Carlos within faction hours received information that Premier Franco was to be killed by the revolutionists and that he would be disposed of at the same time. The idea was, so the king was told, to overthrow the monarchy. The people were query of a change, were confident that the reigning dynasty was behind Franco in all his repressive measures, and therefore were ready to create a new power.

The King's assassination brings into peculiar prominence the head of a notorious family which formerly reigned in Portugal—the house of Braganza. The House Braganza is the lineal heir of the family and the understanding is he will make a strong bid upon popular sentiment to succeed the dead Carlos.

Provoked to Terror.

The news of the assassination swept through the city like the through dry grass and half the populace hurried pale-faced, and knowing where the next blow might fall. There is the greatest dread for the future of the country, which, seems on the verge of being plunged into the throes of a revolution, with all the attendant horrors and bloodshed. Throughout the city consternation reigned.

At the first blush it would seem as though the assassination was the work of anarchists and not of republican sympathizers. Nevertheless the offering groups of the last few weeks have incensed the people for some alarming colonization. The discovery of just their plot, as well as the discovery of many secret stores of weapons and ammunition, have demonstrated beyond questionable the existence of a desperate faction on the part of a large body of the Portuguese to overthrow the present condition and proclaim a republic.

Queen Marie Pia, the mother of King Carlos; the Duke of Oporto, the heir to the throne of Oporto, the heir to the throne; a number of ministers and court officials hastened at once to the palace when the news reached them of the attack upon the royal family.

The cold-blooded murder sent a thrill of horror throughout the country, even among those who have been working for a change in the government. Generally of a republic and sorrow is expressed for the young heir to the throne and for the King and the crown prince.

In April, 1903, an attempt was made on King Carlos' life as he was being driven through Lisbon, but it met with complete failure. On Jan. 30, 1906, an unarmed made an attempt upon the King while the latter was returning from the palace in an open carriage after a drive.

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.
The Purchasable Newspapers of the Eleventh District.

The slush that comes from Washington now and then concerning the subsidized newspapers of the fifth congressional district is most disgusting. The Washington correspondent of the Detroit News sends in the following.

It having been established through the declaration of Dennis E. Alward, west friend of Congressman Darragh, that the newspaper men of the eleventh district of Michigan with whom he was had to do are not for sale, it only remained for George G. Covell's campaign manager to ask his fertil mind to provide a clean bill of health for the editors of the entire district.

And Mr. Dowell's man is there with the goods. He is Bryant Avery, one of the directors of the United States senate, and he not only exculpates all the editors for whom he furnished copy during the last campaign in the counties but he gives a list of the patriotic editors whom he desires to relieve from the hideous charge of receiving the tainted money of the pelf laden wretch because of the people. Mr. Avery is eloquent enough about it to half raise the suggestion that this time Covell ought to get a campaign manager while his late manager takes the major role.

"More than 25 newspapers in the eleventh district supported Mr. Covell from choice," said Mr. Avery, "and not a single paper or editor received compensation for space or services, I am asked it.

"What Mr. Darragh's experience with the newspapers was he alone is best able to state, but that the newspaper fraternity of the eleventh district is not composed of a lot of highwaymen, who are ever ready to hold up a candidate for office because he is rich, or shall out one because he is poor, is exemplified by the support given Mr. Covell in the primaries in 1896, by 25 newspapers. Those news papers were the Greenville Independent, Greenville Call, Howard City Herald, Stanton Herald, Lakeview Enterprise, Edmore Times, Big Rapids Pioneer, Mt. Pleasant Enterprise, Reed City Clarion, Garegds Outline, Charlevoix Sentinel, Kalkaska Leader, Alma, Mellette Review, Crystal Mail, Sheridan Advertiser, Central Lake Torch and the entire press of Grand Traverse county."

This will be interesting to people in Charlevoix county who know that the Charlevoix SENTINEL never supported Mr. Covell in the primaries. It was outspoken and earnest in the support of Mr. Darragh. It did not receive, neither was it offered, any consideration whatever.

Concerning Mr. Covell's candidature at this time we prefer to remain silent. If Mr. Covell wins out in the primaries he will feel no longer supporter in the district than the editor of this paper.

During the primary canvass in 1896, the SENTINEL spoke highly of Mr. Covell as a citizen and republican. It was always considerate and courteous in its treatment of Mr. Darragh's competitor. But it was pledged to Mr. Darragh before Mr. Covell became a candidate, and it never broke a pledge.

It may be that Mr. Covell was entirely indifferent to the attitude of the Sentinel in 1896, but it is transpiring soon after election in which the SENTINEL's editor was a shining target for Mr. Covell's cross fire, seem to indicate that he was not. But the SENTINEL has fought too long in the republican trenches to skulk now, in its old age. Neither does it wish to be placed in the attitude of opposing a Northern Michigan man in the primaries.

There is no question about Mr. Covell's ability or republicanism, whatever else may be said concerning his appeal at black of chivalry in a fair fight.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Normal Notes.

Alma Frisbee and Alyson Scroggie have completed four weeks of practice teaching in the Training room.

Grace Hamlin and Jessie Penowa begin their practice teaching in model this week.

Aunie Metcalf and Grace Jeggison have their practice teaching in the second grade arithmetic.

Mr. J. H. Milford visited the Normal class Wednesday morning.

Beside those mentioned in one of the grades a day and a half last week.

Miss Hines and Miss Hedenstadt led the meeting of the County Normal Teachers at Lansing Saturday. Miss Mayme Scroggie and Alma Frisbee had charge of the training room during the absence of Miss Hines. Different members of the Normal class took charge of the different class recitations. The work went on the same as usual.

Boyne Journal: East Jordan is touching out after some resort trade and why shouldn't they. There is no more beautiful place in Northern Michigan then they have to offer along the South Arm. And at the same time on either shore of the main lake there are hundreds of spots eminently adapted for such purposes. People now days are looking for just such locations. Northern Michigan is simply every year by those lands of people who want to relax from work in the close, sultry cities of more southern climes, and every attractive spot is being taken. Along the lakes north and east of Petoskey, Walloon Lake, north and east of this city, Torch and Elk Lakes and the intermediate chain of lakes are all being taken up. Hundreds of cottages are being built on the shores of these beautiful sheets of water every year. Now what's the matter with good old Pine Lake? The water is as fine, the shores as dry and pretty as the best of them. We believe it is only the lack of effort on the part of our own people which prevents our beautiful lake from being the best resort of all. It is the only inland lake which large lake liners can enter, and some day—when we wake up—they will bring large loads of people direct from Chicago to various docks along the shores of Pine lake.

Educational.

To the Editor:

I have arranged with the Supt. of the schools in the county to visit the Charlevoix schools and meet with the teachers, for the purpose of seeing how effectually our plans are bringing results, and then giving the plans they have using to bring the same results. Supt. Bell, of Boyne City, visits us next week and will meet with the parents at their meeting Friday night, Feb. 14th. I visited East Jordan Monday and met with teachers Monday night. Found the schools in good condition, with a splendid spirit among teachers and students. East Jordan should be proud of its schools.

STEEL PLANT PERILS.

Recklessness a Psychological Factor That Must Be Considered.

Recklessness is certainly a psychological characteristic of men in steel plants. All tradition teaches them to be reckless. The very example of their superiors teaches them to be reckless. The assistant superintendent of the plant that the Illinois Steel company substitutes at Joliet stepped on an unprotected gear and lost his leg just after he had warned his men not to be guilty of any such culpable negligence of their own safety. I am willing to admit the existence of culpable negligence attaches apart from the carelessness of the company. And I say that, but I am also willing to give a specific illustration.

I was standing one day on the platform of a blast furnace. All at once, unexpectedly, I heard the four whistles that indicate danger. There was a "hang" in the furnace. The whirling eddying mass of ore, coke and limestone in the high interior of that furnace had got caught somewhere, somehow, and was refusing to come down. When it did come down there would be a crash and perhaps an explosion.

I ran and got behind a brick pillar. On coming into the plant that morning I had signed a piece of paper, just the same kind of a piece of paper that every visitor signs, saying that I would not hold the Illinois Steel company responsible for anything that might happen to me, I presumed that company would profit by my demise. But observers what the other men around that blast furnace did!

I could see them as I peered out from behind my pillar. Some of them who were already in front of the furnace looked up at it with an expression of profound curiosity on their faces. Two other men who had been standing at the back of the furnace ran all the way round it and come out in front. There they stood, leaning their mute interrogatories at the crate, relieved volumes that might nevertheless the next moment hurl forth an indignant answer at their baffled Everybody's Magazine.

In Nameless Graves.

Not far from Hamburg, on the island of Westerland, is a small graveyard, in which pathetic interest attaches. Here the bodies of those washed up by the man-hunter unnamed and unclaimed are buried. The cemetery was dedicated to this use in 1895, and from then up to now over sixty nameless corpses have found their rest. In 1896 a cross was raised bearing the dedication "The Home of the Homeless." And little mound is further marked by a simple black cross.

Like the Parrot.

"Younger scientists say things that are wonderfully apropos," said one statesman.

"Yes?" answered the other; "she's like our parrot at home. It doesn't know much, but what it does know it keeps repeating until some circumstance arises that makes the remark seem marvelously apt."

BLOOD PRESSURE.

The Determination of Its Relation to Mental States.

In addition to the time honored means which are called "voluntary" various bodily phenomena which are clearly involuntary accompany violent mental excitement. The blush of shame, the distinctive flushes of joy and of anger, the pallor and sweat of fear, the tears of grief and the "creepy hair" of the flesh provoked by horror are familiar examples. The respiration is quickened by joy and retarded by anxiety, and the feeling of relief from anxiety is often a deep sigh. The heart sometimes often disturb the digestion. The heart "bounds with joy," is paralyzed by horror, "leaps to the throat" in terror. The connection between the heart and the emotions is so intimate that the heart was long regarded as the seat of the soul.

Most of these involuntary physical concomitants of mental excitement are brought about by a special part of the nervous system, the sympathetic nerve and its branches, which ramify to every part of the body. The best known instance of this nerve's effect is the dilatation of the blood vessels, which occurs in the face and neck in certain states. These phenomena are susceptible of exact quantitative determination by means of a method devised by the Italian physiologist Mosso. The patient is placed on a delicate instrument of invention of blood supply in the brain. The subject is laid on a board which is pivoted on a fulcrum at the center of gravity. When the subject is asleep and undisturbed the board lies horizontal. Now, if an unpleasant sensation or emotion is induced in the subject his head is involuntarily elevated, in proportion commensurate to the quantity of blood in the brain. An agreeable sensation of creative pleasure has the opposite effect.—Scientific American.

Tennyson's Queer Ways.

It was with great difficulty that Professor Robert Dale Owen, the poet laureate, obtained Tennyson's consent for a sitting, but at last he was persuaded and called at the poet's house. After some little delay the door of the room in which the poet was waiting slowly opened, and Tennyson entered with downcast head, his manner dejected and murmured: "I hate sitting, I hate sitting and sitting." However, Mr. Herkomer was allowed to remain. Soon after he had retired to his room for the night Owen called upon the door. A head was thrust out and Tennyson called out the poet-laureate "I believe you are honest. Good night."

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER X.

During the months which Rex Girdlestone had spent in the affairs of the firm in Fenchurch street had been astonishingly successful. Trade upon the house had been brisker than usual, and three of the company's ships had come in short passages with excellent cargoes. Among these was the Black Eagle, which, to the satisfaction of both Hamblin Miggs and the disgust of his employer, had weathered a severe gale in the Channel, and had arrived safe and sound once more. There had been a marked increase in the business capacity of the old mariner, and the indomitable energy of young Humphrey, made the concern look so flourishing that the former had at last been convinced that if he could but stave off the inspection of his partner's books for a little longer, all would be well. Hence he had with right considerable ingenuity, to the delight the letters from Cuba, which he was satisfied the success of the conspiracy and the manner in which it was led have been misdirected. The old man's figure grew stralighter and his step more firm as the conviction grew upon him that the company would soon return once again to its former condition of affairs.

It may be imagined, therefore, that when the owners of boats in the harbour find in the Orange Free State cause to sue for their claims, the old man's joy at the thought that he saw the accomplishment of his projects he confined to himself from his acquaintance the nature of their enterprise. After searching for Mr. Atkins, etc., and the death of Kirkstooth and the abdicatement of the discovery, it gave a great count of his subsequent movements.

"As to our speculation, the letter said, it is, of course, all up. Even when the Hamlin business proceeds, we will be a prize of stones will remain very low on account of there are fields. It is pass well, but it won't be as great small profit, but it will be a good one. Rex, I tell you, I now will be in Europe that you perhaps I, my wife and help the firm out of the coil you have entered into. I am sorry, I am very regret in having Africa like this so that Williams will have no one to prosecute for."

This letter was a rude shock to the African merchant. Within a week of the receipt of it his son Rex, gloomy and travel stained, walked into the sanctum at Fenchurch street and confronted all the evil tidings by word of mouth. The old man was of too tough a fibre to break down completely, but he had hands that so nervously upon the arms of his chair, and a cold perspiration stood out upon his whitened forehead as he listened to such details as his son considered to afford him.

"You have your stones at sale, though?" he stammered out at last.

"They are in my box at home," said Rex, drawing a bulging leather case from the white marble mantelpiece. "Well so lucky it is clear as much as they and a margin for my expenses and labour worth's. A broken head is all! I may have got from your stones."

"Who could foresee such a thing?" the old man said, passively. "Such a price is sure to be permanent."

Enthusiastic Nomination of Taft Will Do Most to Restore General Public Confidence.

Cleveland Financial Paper Vigorously Declares Democrats at Chicago Candidate. Because It Believes Roosevelt Policies Must Be Continued for Good of Business.

1908 is now here.

Everybody is now facing the New Year with all the hope and confidence and courage that this day can engender. The storm-cloud days which were experienced during the weeks from the death to the 5th of December, and which threw Wall street and the country into a state of uncertainty and panic are over, but that this new year is still fraught with perplexing problems of politics and business no one in the country can doubt, says the Cleveland Commercial Bulletin, in a leading article.

We closely are the questions of financial prosperity and the national election billed this Commercial Bulletin believes that it is quite within the realm of a financial newspaper to give its readers a clear information and discussion of the facts obtainable for the solution of both these questions.

Those forces which, either intentionally promoted the disturbance of business confidence in New York last October, were apparently aimed at President Roosevelt, but it was not intended, evidently, that the dynamite explosion should extend further than the White House door.

Continue Roosevelt Policies.

There are many reasons, however, why the policies of President Roosevelt, the best authorities on finance and statesmanship agree, should be continued.

In advocating the nomination and election of Secretary Taft, as President Roosevelt's successor, the Commercial Bulletin is acting on its own responsibility guided by the best opinions obtainable from the leaders of financial thought throughout the country.

It was taken up this week particularly on its own initiative, guided by its own counsel, and believing that the great question of the whole country and its solution is to be found in the nomination and election of a candidate, whose whole political history gives evidence of the greatest sincerity and ability to fulfill those things which for these past years President Roosevelt has so vigorously initiated.

It is a very rational thing that in this emergency of national affairs that the entire country should look to the state of Ohio for its solution. There has never been a crisis in American affairs when the state of Ohio did not produce the "Man of the Hour." It produced one at Independence and one at Appomattox. It produced the great Lincoln and brought back peace to a distracted nation.

Great Sons of Ohio.

Never since the days of Abraham Lincoln to the time of Theodore Roosevelt has the Republican party been found a president of these United States who was not a native of Ohio. Once in that interim New York produced Grover Cleveland, but Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Harrison, McKinley, were all native of Ohio. Mr. Roosevelt himself owed his accession to the executive office from the fact that he had been selected on the same ticket with an Ohio candidate.

If one leaves the history of the presidential succession he will find in the whole list of cabinet officers many notable sons of the Buckeye state. Who was their leader than Mr. Salmon P. Chase, Mr. Lincoln's secretary of state? Who was their leader in those exciting hours of the rebellion than Edwin M. Stanton? And come down through the list. Mr. Taft's former—Alphonso, who was at one time attorney general under President John Hay, who, though not an Ohioan, has found his wife and home in this state. Mr. Justice Day, and Secretary Sherman are all notable examples of Ohio's greatness.

Why, the names of Ohio men out of American history and there is little of it left.

Why Taft is Popular.

That's one good set of reasons why all the states are looking now to this New Year of 1908 to Ohio to provide a candidate who can meet Mr. Bryan next November.

Let us take some expressions for our belief in the fitness of Mr. Taft's nomination from so eminent an authority as Mr. Henry Litchfield West, who has something to say in a recent number of the Forum, on "The Next Presidential Campaign."

"The battle of 1908," says Mr. West, "is to be of the individual against the entrenched corporate monopolies; and, unless the issues of the times are strangely misleading the individual will be successful. It is this feeling so universally prevalent and this condition of affairs which makes Secretary Taft so popular because he gives assurances that he will, if elected, continue the policies which President Roosevelt has inaugurated.

"Up to the present time Secretary Taft is the only Republican candidate for the presidential nomination who has openly avowed his endorsement of these policies. He has ranged himself on the side of the progressive Republicans and hopes to recruit under his banner all those Republicans who believe in Mr. Roosevelt."

Taft Sure of Ohio.

That's a pretty strong recommendation from a very thoughtful observer of American affairs to begin with. Here's a little bit more about Taft, father which politicians are always talking about and known as the "geographical factor." "The Republican party," continues Mr. West, "is not likely to lose the eastern section of the country twice in succession. In the last 20 years the Democrats and Republicans have only twice divided the program of alternation. If, now the west, which would be the natural order of things, Mr. Philbrick and Mr. Taft are the only figures who appear considerable on the horizon.

"Mr. Taft is already sure of the Ohio delegation; the state committee has subsequently indorsed him, despite the strenuous opposition of Senator Foraker, and there is no doubt of his ability to hold his own until the delegates are chosen. It must also be borne in mind that the progressive element of the party has a decided advantage in having a definite candidate in Mr. Taft. He is their rallying point, while the conservatives throughout the country are not united. This is their handicap and it undoubtedly accrues to the benefit of the candidate upon whom Mr. Roosevelt's special favor rests."

Up to Ohio Republicans.

The whole trend of national thought, so far as the Commercial Bulletin is able to discern it, points to just this one thing. The whole country is in a good deal of perplexity. It has been confronted with a financial problem, which was as unlooked for and apparently indefensible as the San Francisco earthquake. Nobody believes that there was any real cause for it, but it happened and now the question they confronts us at the opening of this New Year is what are we going to do to restore to this country that confidence in its financial affairs which we all believe in and yet so many are afraid to bank on.

A national election is always a disturbing cause in the commercial and financial world and the President may to bring back that confidence which we all desire, give the assurance to the world on the 16th of June from the Coliseum at Chicago that the Republican party has nominated William H. Taft as its successor with such enthusiasm, such a show of excitement that the result of that election will be known and determined from that very hour.

The beginning of that task lies with the Republican voters of Ohio at every very hour. They can by their unanimous action at the next state convention make that task—their result sure.

That is why the Commercial Bulletin joins in its efforts in behalf of Secretary Taft.

HERRICK FOR TAFT

Former Governor in Interview Compares President Taft Leadership to McKinley's in 1896.

Myron T. Herrick, former governor of Ohio, is one of the most enthusiastic of the many prominent public men who are supporting Taft in the sections of the country. In a recent interview in Cleveland Mr. Herrick said, among other things, as follows, his belief that Ohio Republicans should be solidly for Taft in the delegate at war:

"There ought not to be any doubt as to the outcome. I think it is generally conceded that I thought this had possibly a little influence in the nomination of Mr. Taft. And that we worked and made account with our opponents. I think that Mr. Taft was by all great concurrence the strongest man we had. I think there been such genuine and deserved appreciation of my work for my party. Expressions of my work for my party have come to me from all over the country. Taft. It is a happy coincidence that the man who I thought should be nominated, and the man who I thought would be nominated, happen to be the same man.

"I think that Mr. McKinley is very much in the mind of the people. I think that he was first suggested Taft as a prospective nominee for that high office. I think Taft is the natural successor of William McKinley. I think that William McKinley was the very second of Taft's nomination. I think that he was perfect splendidly equipped for service in the office of president. I think Republicans would be in no position if they did not know that the cause of prosperity, of labor and of national development and honor lay in the hands.

Personally, I have the highest regard for Mr. Taft. He is in all respects the ideal Roosevelt Republican. He is the White House ex-President's most trusted counselor. He is the most conservative and safest man to be President that I know. He will be maintained and standed by the friends of the last four years in general under President Roosevelt. I have already received the image whose is to the field against McKinley as a shadow pursued by a substance. Taft is the most practical, evidenced by his strength, of all the men who that his candidates will come to a united party and a united Republican ticket.

"The Republican ticket will be solid for Taft all Republicans in Ohio now know, and all other Republicans will know as soon as our state convention is held.

"The identification of Mr. Taft with the president's policies is not an affiliance. It is the outcome of Mr. Taft's own personality and experience and convictions. He would have had the same policies! Mr. Roosevelt had power derived from them. His practical experience and temperament, too, would compel him to pursue them in a way somewhat different from Mr. Roosevelt—as the two men are different in manner and method.—World's Work.

OLD TIN CANS.

This Way They Finally Disappear From Human Sight.

New people realize when breaking of all the old tin cans, with pans, kettles, buckets, coal hods and the like. They finally disappear from human sight and knowledge and are seen no more. Science shows that they disappear in this way: When a tin can is cast away and forsaken it begins its downward course by becoming rusty. The tin oxidizes or in other words, unites with the oxygen surrounding it in the atmosphere. The oxide of the tin then takes hold of the iron by evaporating into the air while some of it is washed away by the rain into the earth. After the tin is gone the iron of the can finds itself in a new form. Then the molecules of iron combine and become like the tin. It oxidizes and becomes known as iron rust. The metals have no will of their own, no affinities, no understandings, and therefore no intentions as to their present or future motions. They do nothing of themselves. They are simply the blind workers for Deity. These forces unite the atoms of the metals with those of the oxygen. Then the molecules of iron oxides are carried away by the atmospheric electricity and disposed of according to circumstances.

If a small bottle or other piece of tin is cast away on damp ground and an old worm in the basket is turned up, the moisture and the worm acid will be taken away by electric currents from the old tin and will be deposited partly on the glass, the remainder going into the air and being carried off. Deposits of iron and other metals are thus carried around by electricity in the atmosphere and placed to place all over the earth. Chlorine in electric power picks up atoms of iron and goes with them to the ocean, where they are as much at home as in the land. Iron can exist in a state of vapor; therefore they are to be found not only in the atmosphere around this earth, but also in the atmosphere around the sun and the moon.

If a ray of sunlight is sent out of its course, as it is from a piece of glass called a prism, the familiar seven colors of red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet are spread out side by side. When these spectra are analyzed they are found invariably composed of about 500 dark lines in the spectrum of the sun. Light made artificially and not passing through the atmosphere of the earth and the sun does not have these dark lines.

By means of the spectroscope, a gradually invented instrument now in use, has contributed to several scientific discoveries. Scientists have been compelled to explain their addresses in terms of light. Among the first to write themselves down were sodium, potassium, lithium, calcium, chromium, nickel and iron. And the same apparatus led to the discovery of new metals such as cesium, rubidium and thallium. All these are found to be in the same atmosphere. By means of the spectroscope the one hundred millionth part of a grain of sodium in common salt becomes as discernible and unmistakable as the side of a house. This wonderful scientific instrument has enabled scientists to find out what the stars who inhabit the planets in the solar system of the dog star Sirius, for example, have to eat, for without nitrogen they could have no brains or laying eggs, without sulphur no hair and no backbone and water courses or anything of the kind, although the people would be reckoned as vegetable life. They would also be without light because call for breakfast or any fermented liquors.—Baltimore American.

What He Felt Like.

It was the first time he had sung in an Episcopal choir, and he felt strangely out of place in the vestments he wore. The other choristers looked comfortable enough, but the new one was sure he would trip on the skirts of his cassock, when he went up the chancel steps, and he knew that if he did not trip himself up he felt sure his cassock would be safely unseated. The opening prayer had been intoned by the rector, and the singers were in line waiting for the introduction to the processional. To his dismay, when one of the lessons whispered in the new man's ear:

"You're a tenor, aren't you?"

"I suppose so," he replied, "but I feel like a trumpet."—New York Times.

Picturesque Newfoundland.

Newfoundland has been styled a rough stone with no interior, and doubtless to the passenger on some Atlantic liner, seeing its bold headland jutting out into the ocean, with its weather beaten cliffs standing grim and cold, the description may seem a fitting one. But to those who know it well, who have seen the fir clad valleys, its clear lakes and streams and hillsides tinged with the red and gold of autumn, it is a rough stone with a very fair interior.—Lewiston Herald.

If You Are Sick

It is because some of the organs of the body are not doing their work well. There is a lack of that nervous energy that gives them motion. Consequently you are weak, worn-out, nervous, irritable, cannot sleep; have headache, indigestion, etc. because there is not sufficient nerve force to lead the organs active and allow them to perform their natural functions. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores health because it restores this nervous energy.

"I have been sick for a year, but did not know what was the matter until I read about the symptoms and took some of your samples. I felt better after the first dose, and now I am well and strong. COUNTRY FOR LIGHT SLEEPERS.

Japan Has No Domestic Animals to Disturb the Slumberer.

The Japanese college girl had been unable to sleep because a dog had howled all night beneath her window. "Now, in Japan," she said, "such a trouble could never happen. We have no animal pets there, we don't even have useful domestic animals, such as cows, sheep and pigs. If the Japanese feed for his pleasure a dog and cat, and then inflicted these animals or spared the night out of doors, quilling the neighbors' rest with their uproar—Well, I don't know what punishment would give him, but it would be something frightful, I fancy, with boiling oil in it. We have no domestic animals. No dogs and cats we prefer children. Sheep we don't require, for we eat no mutton, and our clothes are made of silk and of cotton instead of wool. Mules and donkeys we don't need, because men do our loading. Pigs, with their filth, are unknown to us—we couldn't permit a Japanese to eat pork. We do keep chickens, it is true, but they are always kept far away from our dwelling house. On this account Japan has nights of very full, even sleep. Oh, the best place on earth for sleeping."

WOUND WATCH WRONG WAY.

The Story of a Letter Handed Woman and stier Timepiece.

"Women don't deserve to own watches, frequently remarked a jewelry. Such was the case in a recent case of them. A woman bought a watch from my firm recently and gave her strict instructions to wind it every 24 hours and always at the same hour as nearly as possible. Two days later she came back with the watch and said it was wrong. I told her, but she insisted that it was wrong. A few days later she came back with the same complaint. I told her that I had gone over the watch with the minutiety of a microscope. I had found it in good condition. I had found it in good condition. The third time she came I asked her to show me how it was wrong. She had a watch of a peculiar discovery. The watch was wound in the wrong way. It was necessary to wind the watch also but each winding it the wrong way. Thus the peculiar discovery with our customers, for that matter, all."

Beaver on Elk River.

"The impression that the beaver is afraid of man is little imagery in the backwoods," said George H. The Indian never takes more than a beaver at a time, and he never takes the young. The Indian knows that if he takes the young he will be unable to find the old beaver, and the young would perish. The Indian knows that the beaver is a very valuable animal, and he treats it accordingly

SEEKS RURAL PARCEL POST.

Senator Burnham Introduces Bill to Provide for Merchandise Delivery.

Senator Burnham of New Hampshire, has introduced in Congress a measure of distinct importance to rural interests throughout the United States. It provides a rural delivery parcels post for merchandise and other articles weighing not more than four pounds on rural free delivery routes. The measure has the indorsement of the President and Postmaster General Meyer. It provides in lieu of the establishment of a domestic parcel parcels post at special rates of postage for the delivery of handicraft, dry goods, drugs, books and other merchandise. The rate of postage shall be 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound or fraction thereof, and on parcels weighing less than a pound at rates equal to cents in less 1 cent; over two and under four ounces, 2 cents; over eight and under sixteen ounces, 4 cents, and over sixteen ounces and under one pound, 5 cents.

UNIONS PLAN GREAT PARTY.

To Call Convention for Nominating Candidates for President.

At a meeting of the United Railroad Unions in Washington, President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, was appointed to call a conference of national and labor union representatives to meet in this city next month for the purpose of nominating candidates for president and vice president of the United States. It is planned also to adopt a platform for a national labor party. Recent decisions of the Supreme Court in which labor has been declared unconstitutional were criticised. It was declared that labor had gone throughout the country most zealous in support of Democratic tickets, but now felt that their appointment "meant opposed to labor and that it was time for labor to show what it could receive the justice to which it is entitled.

LIQUOR UNDER BAN.

In Eighty Cities of the United States Prohibition Now Rules.

Under the strong tide of prohibition which has so successfully demonstrated its power in Southern States, the "dry" area in America has been thrown back in the last twelve months. Eighty cities in seventeen States are now enforcing prohibition laws on their ac-300,000 inhabitants, and of these eighty municipalities, thirty-three "went dry" in 1909. Some cities have adopted prohibition statutes, as the Georgia cities, but many of them have voted dry under the provisions of a local option law.

Additions to the list of dry cities during 1909 include: Alabama—Anniston, Birmingham, Huntsville, Mobile, Montgomery and Selma. California—Berkeley, Georgia—Athens, Atlanta, Augusta, Brunswick, Macon and Savannah, Illinois—Champaign, Jacksonville, Urbana, Indian Territory—Durant, Muskogee, Tulsa, Wagoner, Massachusetts—Haverhill, Lynn, Worcester, North Carolina—Asheville, Raleigh, Ohio—East Liverpool, Hubbard—Girard, Oklahoma City, Shawnee, Enid, Tennessee—Clarksville, Jackson, Knoxville, Vertrees—Harriman.

Particular watch has been kept on Atlanta to discover how the city that made discussed Georgia law operates there. This watch was kept by the Atlanta Constitution, which did not favor prohibition, and that paper's testimony is believed to be unbiased.

In a special story the Constitution admits that the chief complaint against the law "worked a revolution in the city's worse quarter, and as is almost invariably the case, the police records show that the public is actually saving money by the operation of the "dry" law in Atlanta, on January 4, 1907 when the high license law was in effect, there were 1,000 arrests made during thirty-two of which were connected with drunkenness on January 4, 1908, last eight days after the dry law went into effect, there were 1,000 arrests, 400 of which were drunkenness. In 1907 the city's revenue from the liquor traffic was $375,000, while on Jan. 29, 1908, it was $291,317,22. The cost of police per capita has almost doubled, notwithstanding the present money stress, and has increased from $17,29 to $21.86 during the last forty-two years.

When Mayor Ansley came into the cash room we had only $25,000 in paid; today we have $.56,955.80 in paid cash in the treasury alone, not counting but in doubtful and hard-to-get assets."

Dallas, Texas's starting capital on Jan. 14, 1907, amounted to $1,756,491.16,13 —all of which is held in cash, of the amount $1,000,000 in coin is held on deposit to secure the payment of $750,000 gold certificates, $417,000,000 silver certificates, and $5,315,000 treasury notes outstanding. The treasury reports, which is kept by law, amounts to $15,000,000. The cash on hand available to pay the current expenses of the government on Dec. 14 was $299,752,200.05.

Uncle Sam does not keep all of his money in Washington, although there is a good deal of it there. The money is distributed among the different subtreasuries, mints and national bank depositories as follows:

Treasury, Washington, $175,971,844.09
Subtreasury, New York, 29,027,027.41
Subtreasury, Baltimore, 10,057,023.11
Subtreasury, Boston, 10,028,000.00
Subtreasury, Philadelphia, 10,028,000.00
Subtreasury, Chicago, 55,063,063.72
Subtreasury, New Orleans, 10,028,000.00
Subtreasury, San Francisco, 23,199,000.00
Mint, Philadelphia, 1,000,000.00
Mint, Denver, 5,830,000.00
Mint, New Orleans, 1,000,000.00
Mint, San Francisco, 322,483,744.10
Assay office, New York, 10,028,000.00
National banks, 216,284,455.00
Treasury Philippine Islands, 2,000,000.00
Total, 1,000,000,000.00

In addition to the working balance and the "reserve" in the vaults of the treasury, there are bonds in the vaults at Washington of which $635,315,000 is held by the trustees of national banks and $176,200,158 to secure deposits in national banks. The additional sum of $166,751,000 is deposited for similar purposes in the subtreasuries of New York and San Francisco, making a total of $1,076,267,158 of other people's money in Uncle Sam's chests.

BAD PLAYING.

Congressman Darragh Resigned and His Friends are Getting Back.

From the Petoskey News

It seems that Congressman Darragh, of the Eleventh Michigan, didn't know it was loaded. For several years, Mr. Darragh has rubbed his rabbit's foot on the newspapers of his district, and irrespective of political alliance, they have supported him in his canvass to be returned successively to the national house of representatives. But now Mr Darragh seems to have arrived at a place where he either can't or don't want to go back to Washington, and the first thing he did was to throw down the news papers of his district, and say some uncomplimentary things about them. Right there was where Mr. Darragh made his mistake, and he has finally awakened to realize it.

It don't pay for a man to throw down the newspapers until after he first considerately dies. Newspapers are the best friends a man can have if he can treats them half way decently but they can also make it distinctly miserable for a man, either by showing him up or ignoring him entirely. Mr. Darragh, we think, ought to take another look at his hand, and then try to square himself with the bunch he has thrown down.

Capt. M. J. Bonner is suffering from an attack of rheumatism.

Another "Cream" boy in town. He has taken up his residence with Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Crum.

Mr. George C. Snyder who has been mill-right here for the past year or so has resigned his position. Mr. John C. Green takes his place.

Word was received here last week of the death on the 29th, of Rev. Father P. D. Murray at Wabasha, Minn. Father Murray was born near Belfast, Ireland, and came to this country when quite young. After his ordination as a priest he was sent to Beaver Island, to take charge of that parish; being the first Parish Priest to be stationed on the island. At that time which was in the early 60s there were not any church on the island, therefore he purchased a tract of land and erected a small church, near the site of the present church. The Rev. Father remained here for six or seven years from here he was removed to Richmond where he had charge of a parish for several years, and thence to Minnesota where he remained until his death.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The Boyne City board of trade has been very active in the last two months and it is understood several new industries are coming there among them a cotton glove factory.

Central Lake Torch: We hear that Mr. Eugene Byers (formerly of this village) placed the money which he received from the sale of his place in a bank in Colorado, and the bank has now closed and the end is not yet. We hope Mr. B. will be fortunate enough to realize the amount in the near future.

A Boyne City special says: The Manistee & Northwestern railway yesterday started out a corps of surveyors in the vicinity of Fife Lake for the purpose of extending the line of the road across the northern part of the state to Alpena. It is expected the road will be a strong competitor for the forest products and minerals which abound around Alpena. The new line has been projected for some time, but this is the first actual work done in that direction.

The Lake Michigan Yachting Association decided to start the annual Mackinac race of the Chicago Yacht club from Traverse City on July 25. There is some question as to whether the tars will go to Mackinac, as they have done in the last few years. The citizens of Harbor Point and Petoskey, Mich., have offered strong inducements to get the tars to cruise to either of these points, and the course will be determined March 9 at a meeting of the Association.

Petoskey Herald: Miss Helen Stout, the librarian of the library at Traverse City, is so well known in Petoskey that the following, taken from the Grand Rapids Press, will be of interest to her friends here: "One of the passengers on the stalled Pere Marquette passenger train was Miss Helen Stout, of this city, who was returning from a two month's visit with her parents, the Rev. and Mrs. C. T. Stout, of Key West, Fla. But a few days before Miss Stout had been bathing in the ocean and baking under a southern sun, and the transition was so sudden it was almost shocking. Miss Stout spent the holidays in Cuba, and, although it was like summer there, she expressed pleasure at being back where there is real winter, despite its discomforts".

Traverse City Eagle: In commemoration of a half century of wedded life, Capt. and Mrs. W. T. Sisger were given a happy surprise last night at the home of their daughter, Mrs G. L. Howhall, of 853 East Front street. About thirty of the old friends of the couple were present to honor the event and to wish them many years more of the congenial wedded life. Their lives have been very eventful. Mr. Sisger was born in Germany, while the early home life of the wife, who was Miss Sarah Hazeltine, was in Canada. Some time after their marriage, which occurred February 17, 1858, at Racine, Wisconsin, they moved to Atwood, Antrim county, where they resided for 32 years. It was while they lived in that village, a town of 250 inhabitants, that the longest part of their life history was made. Rev. Mr. Allington, in behalf of their friends, presented them with a handsome gold lined berry spoon and a set of teaspoons.

Pellston Journal: James Wilson, who has charge of the farming operations for the Deganian Land & Lumber Co., had 32 acres of potatoes planted for the company, yielding 5,242 bushels. Some of them were planted late and the seed was the best, but the poorest yield averaged better than 100 bushels to the acre. The best yield was on 34 acres, where 1,[illegible] bushels were raised, or an average of 1,[illegible] bushels per acre. This piece was planted early from very choice seed, carefully tended, kept clean and free from bugs, as all potato fields should be, hence the magnificent results. Two cars of potatoes were shipped to Paxton, Ill., and one car and part of another were from the 34 acres. The Journal saw them in store and tried them, and certainly never saw any finer, and hope the Paxton editors may be fortunate enough to try some of them, as Northern Michigan grown potatoes are probably the best raised in the country. We cannot imagine a crop that will so profitably as this piece of potatoes. Since the Journal has been at Pellston, prices have ranged from 35 cents to a dollar bushel at wholesale, which would be an average of 62½ cents. Suppose we call it 40 cents, the farmer could quickly pay for his farm if he planted, and carefully cared for a few acres of potatoes each year.

St. Ignace special: Driven helpless by the wind out on the ice of Lake Michigan Wednesday morning, Raymond Mailhot, a fisher boy, 17 years old, narrowly escaped the frozen deep for nearly forty miles, in a wavering course like a storm-driven rudderless ship at sea, and landed safely after over 24 hours on the shore of Emmet county. He had been driven out on the lake to the westward, then blown eastward, crossing the head of the Straits of Mackinac, besides traversing almost an equal distance on the lake. Wednesday morning, equipped with a blanket and an ax, the accoutrement of those who fan through the ice, Raymond set out about dawn for a fish shanty on the shore of Lake Michigan, but the storm burst upon him. When he reached the lake he attempted to reach the fish shanty for the shelter but became lost. Snow drifted by the wind, made it impossible for him to see anything. He thought it would be death to remain still, so on he went in the direction he thought was toward home. Sometimes he struggle almost spent, for he was not inured to cold. He found his way over the waste of ice and snow, the ice being piled in places ten feet high. The morning passed according to his watch, and he found no shelter. He traveled as in a dream, at times creeping to a halt—breath all hobo and weak—weak, too, to shout for help. At 3 o'clock Thursday morning he dragged himself to a fish camp near Cecil bay, Emmet county. At the camp he was cared for, and brought home by stage.

An Ordinance

Section 1—That sections 2 and 3 of ordinance number 1 entitled "An ordinance to prohibit the use of firearms within the City of Petoskey" and providing for licensing and taxing dogs, adopted April 1, 1895.

The City of Charlevoix ordains:

Section 1—That sections 2 and 3 of ordinance number 1 entitled "An ordinance to prohibit the use of firearms within the City of Petoskey" and providing for licensing and taxing dogs, adopted April 1, 1895.

The City of Charlevoix ordains:

Section 1. That section 2 of said ordinance is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

Section 2. It shall be the duty of the City Clerk upon the full annual and continued ordinance of dogs, and upon the payment of the annual license fee, to issue to the owner or keeper thereof, a tag, bearing the number of the license and representing the best Roman or Arabic numerals, and the City Clerk shall keep a record of such number, and the name of the dog to which the license fee shall be paid.

Section 2. The Clerk shall deliver to each person who shall license a dog, a tag for the collar of the dog, a metal check bearing the number of the license, and a receipt for the license and the year and the number of the license, and the City Clerk shall keep a record of the dog licensed, the name of the owner, and the number of the license issued, and the date of the license issued, and the number of the license issued, and the number of the license issued, and the number

A CROWN OF FAITH

CHAPTER XVIII.

Ella Wyberly was in her luxurious dressing room the day of Freshmen night. She believed that all the household were engaged in slumber, and had turned on her toilet table. The long lamp was brushed and bound up for the night. She wore a long, loose white dressing gown made of thin nun's veiling.

The girl walked slowly up and down the large room, her hands clasped before her, her eyes cast on the ground, as if they read a sad story in the richly patterned carpet. Her face was pale, but her eyes shone like stars.

"I shall have to make up my mind at last," she said slowly to herself, aloud. "I must escape from this house. I might not to give my heart to a man for of late, I have lost my faith in women. I think the cruelty of these around me has resulted in my coldness to them." Why should I live unlovely? Here do I know that there is any one to love in the world? Ah! I do, indeed, love I am an heiress. At least, even if they make me buy the lady, I shall have control over the fortune of a poor professor.

I am worried and blue, besides, it is such lubricant measures to do in haste. I am nervous, and I am sick."

She sank to herself quite unknowingly quite tired. It was the first time she had lived in such a curtain. In had been fresh and invigorated by exhilaration, and it had become in danger of losing its fairly in honesty.

She leaned her elegant foot upon the carpet.

"I will go away and make my own fortune."

Suddenly the door of her room burst open. Ella had locked it, and, knowing this—for the door was of oak—she was also startled a very of fear. She expected to see a ruffian, or some other of her jealous rivals, in which case, she knew, Alyce would be her protector. Alyce was the thousands overawing in the possession of the Wyberly. Ella had been her protégée, and Alyce had been her protector, ever since Ella's childhood.

Ella had been a dark traveling suit of Scotch tweed, a Tyrolean hat, and an enormous black hat, which was worn in her left hand, and equipped for a journey.

"Mamma," she cried, "you frightened me! I had locked the door."

"I have a key which opens all the doors in the house. Why do you look so? Is it bad to scream. I do not think you ever heard me scream before."

"No matter."

"Why, what ails you, and dress yourself so quickly as possible in that tailored-lady costume? We are to be ready in a few minutes. Mr. Wyberly and Mr. Mr. Worthington will be here in a few minutes to personally and pick you up for your trip to Washington. Marsh and Peterson will accompany us.

"Where are we going, mamma?"

"Ask no questions. The time has gone for questions. Do as I tell you, your pouch. You have done with them."

"Mamma, you jest, I hope."

"Pray don't talk; every moment is of value. We must be ready when the daylight Wyberly did not look at her daughter. Her eyes were fixed on the wall. Ella was a tall and supple girl, and looks like her mother beautifully.

"Mamma, are you going to take me to Indianapolis to marry some man?"

"In that house, where your dress will be dressed in the morning of the world. You are to wear sackcloth—to walk barefoot—to crawl on your knees—to do penance for your sins. I know more than you think I know."

"Mamma, I know more than you think I know."

"Ella drew herself up.

"I believe you. I know he my sufferings the crime of murder. It cannot be that it is impossible that a man of my age and creed would tell you so. Perhaps a man of your age would be shocked at such a lie as this. I am young and love the pleasures of life. I love dalliance, honor, and, especially, love. You and Miss Worthington have made me hate it; and you are to enter an unheard-of sisterhood in a Romish nunnery. I love Miss Worthington—she is a fascinating and generous woman—she is a fascinating and generous woman—she is a fascinating and generous woman

NEW YORK STATE MEET

Patrons of Husbandry in Session at Hornell.

ORDER GROWS IN STRENGTH.

State Master Godfrey's Annual Address—Need of Agricultural Education Discussed—Important Matters Considered—Officers Elected.

The thirty-fifth annual session of the New York state grange commenced at Hornell, N. Y., on Feb. 4-7. State Master F. N. Godfrey delivered his annual address at the first session. He congratulated the importance of agricultural education and regretted that the grange scholarships given by the state grange do not seem to be appreciated by young men and women, as there were only nineteen who filled the scholarships the past year and only four of the six scholarships awarded were made use of. He thought that this was largely due to a misunderstanding of the terms and conditions. He recommended that the legislature be asked to appropriate a certain sum annually to maintain agricultural schools by or in connection with universities.

The State Fair.

Concerning state fairs he recommended that the state fair commission be reduced in numbers and that no money be paid a commissioner except they are now working gratuitously and that they be made responsible for the expenditure of moneys appropriated by the commission.

Mr. Godfrey spoke with great force against the present method of conducting the county fairs, in many instances, he said, they were so built to the farmers to the hideous shows allowed on the grounds and the liquor and low trash gambling carried on. He hoped that the state grange would take a stand on the subject, believing that it will not commence true track gambling that they will not drive him out of the field now before it and supplanted by the governor to put a stop to this hideous nuisance.

State Master Godfrey said that there were 175 grange halls owned by granges in the state with a total valuation of over $200,000.

The Road Question and Barge Canal.

Concerning the road improvement question, he said that great care and judgment should be exercised in planning improvements to avoid unnecessarily increasing the roads leading to market from every direction within the state and materially contributory to each city, town or railway station rather than to build a road from one place with another largely in the interests of automobiles.

In regard to the barge canal, Mr. Godfrey remarked that there is no good reason why this state should burden itself in building and maintaining what is in fact one piece only of a continuous waterway. The speaker commended the attitude of Superintendent Greene toward the barge canal as expressed in his annual report. The speaker favored legislation for the purpose of providing a method of appropriation of funds sufficient to relieve well estate from double taxation. In closing he said, "The influence of the grange has become a powerful factor in matters of state and national legislation, and we should studiously refrain from any action that may tend to forfeit the respect of those who now look to it for wise direction."

State Secretary's Report.

State Secretary W. N. Giles submitted the following statistical report: The total number of granges Jan. 1, 1907, was 626; organized during the year, 60; dormant, 3. The total number of granges Jan. 1, 1908, was 623. There has been a net gain during the year of 6,179 members. The total number of members Jan. 1, 1907, was 37,851. The counties having the largest numbers of granges are as follows, all of which have thirty or more: Chautauqua 20, membership 2,112; Steuben 20, membership 2,248; Jefferson 18, membership 1,837; Oswego 15, membership 1,675; St. Lawrence 15, membership 1,722. Seven juvenile granges have been organized, two within the past year. The total number of Patrons granges in the state is forty-five, and forty-seven grange-counties are represented in the state. The secretary's financial statement showed receipts for the year of $23,200.65 and the amount paid over to the treasurer.

Committee Reports.

The committee on co-operation and trade suggested that more efforts be done in the matter of co-operation among members of the Order. They believed that if each subordinate grange would choose a legislative committee to cooperate with all other granges in the county and appoint a co-operative buyer and seller that co-operation would be more practicable.

The legislative committee, Hon. E. B. Norris, chairman, expressed personal thanks and the thanks of all members of the state grange for the courtesy extended to the grange through its committee by three successive Governors, Governor Spencer, Governor Chandler, Speaker Wadsworth, chairmen of the various committees, heads of departments, etc., at Albany. The committee recounted steps taken to secure good roads by the legislature last year, the grange bills being favorably acted on by both houses and approved by the governor. Committee also referred to the fact that the grange could not support either the Page or Cullen bills with reference to the rural schools, and the committee to discuss the matter had held most useful conferences with the owners of cattle (or) to stamp out creating the pure food department and killing the Sab Joe school bill, so that the grange was not in court in carrying on this work. The committee believes that if the grange would be willing to support either the superintendent of the department or the support of the commissioner who will distribute instruction other matters that relate to the government reimbursement of slaughtered in the cattle (tuberculosis and inspection of the agricultural fairs, to supplement in right a scale and other matters the committee believe the value of their labors in active legislation, but in closing we should studiously refrain from any action that may tend to forfeit the respect of those who now look to us

1,000,000 TO FREE CHINA.

Oriental Says Empire Is Raising Army to Drive Out Nations.

At a meeting at the Young Men's Christian Association headquarters in San Francisco Hui Po Kaun, editor of the Chinese World, told his audience that China was rising an army of 1,000,000 men to drive the European nations out of the empire. "But do will never be a menace to America," said the editor, "because, among other things we have legislated against it. We love the United States as the only nation on earth with a one sentence. China," he continued, "is just awakening from her slumber and is getting ready to go to work. Who she does this could not tell. Germany, France, England, Russia and other robbing and thieving nations hope to have a foothold in China. If Russia gets what she wants and China resists, there will be hell to pay. Chinese soldiers are well trained to be good fighters and to obey orders. Japan did. China is determined to be the greatest nation on earth."

MARION GREY IS GUILTY.

Verdict Affirms Charge of Fraud in Use of Mails.

Marion Grey, officer, broker, was found guilty of using the United States mails to defraud, in a verdict returned in the criminal court here in Chicago, and was released on bonds of $5,000 each. He is charged with selling worthless stock in the Chicago Railway company and the Chicago Railways Company for the year ending March 31 [illegible].

FRESH AIR SCHOOL.

Hot Sensations Furnished Pupils with Cold Feet.

A fresh air school, unique among educational institutions in this country, has been opened in Philadelphia. It is. The school will be conducted indoors, in that it is held inside a building, but great activity is always on hand in three schools each room, extending the length and width of each, and an elaborate system of ventilation afford an atmosphere of cold, pure air, making the room needs adaptable to the conditions necessary to comfortable and healthful study by every student.

The idea of establishing the school was first suggested by the Public School and League for the Suppression of Tuberculosis when and found of the satisfactory results attained by many schools of the kind in European countries. The system is operation in the Lincoln school, which is almost universal throughout Europe, has been adopted for the Providence school with marked success.

The usual custom of removing the outer coats while in the class room will not be followed in the "fresh air school," except when the weather compels the closing of the large windows. Students subject to cold, extraction of teeth, tonsil or adenoid operations in sudden bugs, under for the purpose, and any gauze or artificial aids to nostrils and pipes, herbal, the glands and cheeks and other paraphernalia, by the class rooms have been constructed on portable platforms so that it will be possible to move the pupils into the rays of the sun. The school is a part of the city's health school system.

A MODERN UTOPIA.

Millionaire's Plan for a Model Village in Ohio.

James W. Ellsworth a coal operator, whose home is in New York, has taken under his protection the village of Hudson, in northern Ohio, which was founded by a company of Congregationalists in 1826 and is the home of Western Reserve University, and intends to make it the model village of the world. It will be well as a seat of learning. He has already made one gift of $1,000,000 to the village, and within the next few months he will spend many millions in improvements which will make the town and surrounding and his plan of making it an ideal village perfect.

Perhaps the most novel part of the program is beautifying the village in the description of unsightly buildings and everything in fact that does not add to the beauty of the village. He has been buying up property all over the village on which stands ugly buildings and he thinks this is a detriment to his plans. These structures will be torn down and the sites occupied by neat and tidy places.

Ellsworth is a man of many of age and was born on a small farm near Hudson. His father established a gold mine in Colorado and made a fortune. He was educated in Oberlin and Hudson. After several years hard work he started in the coal business for himself. For the past 10 years he became one of the largest independent coal operators in the country.

Traverse City has discarded voting machines and will fall back on the old Australian system.

R. H. Harris, of Ellsworth, is a candidate for Judge of Probate of Antrim county, and has a good chance of winning out on the ground that the northern part of the county has it coming.

Northport Leader: A. M. Leslie arrives here yesterday to meet some parties who are to look over the Northport Beach hotel, with a view to operating it this season. The parties will arrive here tonight.

James P. Burdick, first assistant on Grassy Island light station in Wisconsin, has been promoted to keeper of the South Manitou Island light station; vice W. P. Larson resigned, transferred to the keepership of the Washington Island, Door County, harbor light station. The change will take effect March 1.

Chicago dispatches recently stated that John D. Rockefeller had purchased a large tract of land on Portage lake, 1,200 acres in all, the land being twelve miles north of Manistee and on this will be established a summer camp for boys, a camp designed of by many a youth and achieved by only the sons of wealthy parents. This land is in the vicinity of Red Park.

The Rev. Louis Grossenbaugh, pastor of the Boyne City Methodist church, suffering from nervousness and a general breaking down, has sent in his resignation to stewards. After a few weeks he will move to a more congenial climate. Mr. Grossenbaugh has held the pastorate for two years and a half, during which time he has built the new church, a very fine edifice, and added scores to the membership. He handled pastorates in Niles, Lansing and Petoskey.

East Jordan Herald: Contractors Gries Wilkinson and Gaunt started in Monday to build the dock for the new iron furnace and charcoal plant. The dock is to be 1,020 feet with a projection out for deep water. Some 630 piles are to be used, more than half being 75 feet long. On Wednesday Mr. Monroe was sick and the fresse put the pile driver engine out of commission. The engine was taken to Boyne City and work will probably be resumed next Monday.

Cadillac's prospective paving, about which so much has been said inside and outside of city official circles during the past few months, was disposed of lately although a vote of eight of the ten aldermen in favor of using brick for the extension of North Mitchell street's pavement and limitable for all the rest of the paving contemplated. Inasmuch as four fifths of the aldermen united in a decision of the long-pending subject their decision will without doubt be accepted by the people of the city as the best thing that could have been done.

Boyne Journal: Another big saw mill has been added to Boyne City's list of large industries. The mill that has recently been built, in fact is just being finished, by the W. H. White & Co. to the eastern part of town, near the Veneer plant, is a mammoth affair, built in the most approved manner and equipment with the latest type of modern machinery. Like all of the mills and factories built by the Whites it is a substantial and permanent affair, made to do the best work with the minimum of expense. We understand that the machinery is about all placed and that it has been, or is just about to be, tested and that it will be but a short time before another big business, employing a large number of men, will be in operation in our city.

Boyne City special: The dry goods store of Leo Lindstedt, caught fire shortly after 9 o'clock Monday night from an unknown cause and before it could be gotten under control the fire had done about $100,000 damage. The store is located in the brick block on the corner of Water and Clark streets. The fire originated in the rear of the dry goods store and before the department could get water had eaten its way through the ceiling and the adjoining buildings. Others who have lost by the fire are the W. H. White company, A. M. Harris and Knowles & Converse, law offices; W. H. Quick, furniture, and the First National bank. These concerns occupy a two story brick building, one of the finest in the city, and it will be a total loss. There was a strong east wind and at midnight it seemed possible that other buildings might be burned before the flames could be controlled.

Traverse City Eagle: J. W. Hanson, chairman of the committee to solicit subscriptions to the bonds for the building of the Traverse City street railway and the Grand Traverse railroad, has two of our leading business men down for $1,000 each and he is looking for some of that kind, hoping to land them soon, as some are taking very favorably. A few days ago John R. Sands, president of the board of trade, subscribed $1,000, and this morning, Mayor A. V. Friedrich telephoned Mr. Hanson that he would subscribe $1,000. If there are any others who would like to do likewise, the committee will be pleased to attend to it either telephonically or night, or receive subscriptions in any form, or they will be glad to answer any question regarding the bonds or their issuance. In a few days the committee will meet to discuss plans for raising the required amount. The bonds on the Traverse City street railway are for $500 denominations, and the Grand Traverse railroad are for $1,000 denomination. People desiring to subscribe for less amounts can do so.

A mad dog bit three boys one day last week in Milton township, sons of Harry Powell, Fred Warner and Frank Russell. Harry Powell at once applied tobacco to the wounds of his son, and brought him to the physicians' office, but whether the boys will be taken to Ann Arbor or not is not yet determined. The dog, a spotted hound, was killed in the sheep pen of a farmer named Byers, where it was biting the sheep. Just where the dog came from could not be determined. Early in the afternoon it was seen running swiftly along the highway, frothing at the mouth and having every appearance of suffering from hydrophobia. The boys were unable to catch it and after biting them went on through the township, attacking several dogs and sheep. It was also stated that several other children were bitten by the brute, one of them being terribly injured, but these stories could not be confirmed. The whole township is terrified over the result, and it is probable that there will be a general slaughtering of dogs, sheep and other animals that are under suspicion.

Petoskey News: Fr. Edmund Hudson, of Petoskey, was tendered a unique reception and banquet last night at Pabahatown by the Indians of his parish, about 60 of them gathering in the old school building and preparing a supper that would have done credit to any chef. The entire work was done by the women of the village, and to them is given much credit for the success of the affair. In the hall were placed several tables, their snow snippery, tastily arranged table decorations and elaborate menu calling forth much favorable comment from their spiritual advisor, who appreciated to the full the efforts of the people in showing him this tribute of esteem. The Catholic mission at Pabahatown is more than half a century old, Fr. Mak, the beloved pioneer priest, who spent his life thus among the red men of that place, founding the mission in 1850. He was succeeded by Fr. Zoro, who was succeeded by Fr. Bruno, Fr. Innocent next coming to work among the people. Fr. Hudson has been with them a year and a half, and although a young man has already won for himself a place in the hearts of the people, and single handed is fighting the worst enemy of the red man, the liquor traffic.

The Jumping off Place.

"Consumption had me in its grasp and I had almost reached the jumping off place when I was advised to try Dr. King's New Discovery; and I want to say right now, it saved my life. Improvement began with the first bottle, and after taking one dozen bottles I was well and happy once again, says George Moore, of Grimes Island, N. C. As a remedy for coughs and colds and healer of weak, sore lungs and for preventing pneumonia New Discovery is supreme. 50c and $1.00 at F. G. Hines & Co. druggist. Trial bottle free.

Neighborhood Favorite.

Mr. E. D. Charles, of Harbor, Maine, speaking of Electric Bitters, says: "It is a neighborhood favorite here with us." It deserves to be a favorite everywhere. It gives quick relief in dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney derangement, malaria, chills, nervousness, weakness and general debility. Its action on the blood, as a thorough purifier makes it especially useful as a spring medicine. This grand alterative tonic is sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c.

—Joseph M. Blair, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Blair, of this city, who recently left New Mexico for California, is at Hiposo, in the latter State, has bought a twenty acre farm and already has five acres of grapes set out.

—Mr. and Mrs. Noble gave another of their enjoyable dancing parties at the Eaton Hotel Friday evening. A Petoskey orchestra furnished the music. Refreshments were served and a lovely time is reported by all present.

—The merry tingle of Mayor Armstrong is heard on the street again. The doctor was out again Tuesday assuming himself. He may visit relatives in the Saginaw section next week, but expects within the month to resume his practice.

—Another old settler has passed over the Chebec. Isaac Alger died at his home in this city Friday night. He had been connected with a homestead in Marion, near Barnard, in 1866, and continuously lived thereon until a few years ago, when ill health compelled him to cease active work.

—Died, at her home near Ellsworth, Feb. 24th, Emma Jane, wife of David H. Alexander, aged 41 years and 8 months. The interment was in Barnard cemetery. Besides a husband she leaves a mother, three sisters and five brothers. She was a member of Ellsworth Grange, active in all good works, and warmly devoted to her home and family. She was born in DeKalb County, N. Y., moving with her parents to Glen Haven in 1869. Later moving to East Jordan. She was married June 30, 1889.

—L. S. See is in Detroit and Cleveland this week on business.

—At the home of Jos. D. Smith, a ten pound girl, laid Friday.

—W. J. Pearson of Boyne Falls was in town last Thursday and Friday.

—We can lick the man who sent us that Illuminated Valentine postal card yesterday!

—I. D. Bartholomew & Co., have just installed a 25½ Majestic steel range at the Hotel Bartlett.

—Capt. Ava Smith left today for Grand Haven for examination on application for a raise in his master's license.

—Marie Mayne, who is teaching in St. Ignace, is home for a few days, on the occasion of the marriage of her cousin, Miss Janette Campbell.

—Dr. A. B. Spinney has closed a deal for the purchase of the old hotel building at Smyrna for $1,100. The business men of Smyrna gave him a bonus of $500.

—W. W. Thayer, assistant superintendent, U. S. Bureau of Fisheries, was here yesterday, on business connected with the operation of the branch hatchery here.

—The Northport and Manistique car-ferry was stuck in the ice between Northport and Fox Islands all day Monday and Tuesday. She was plainly seen from this port yesterday.

—Will A. See, of Portland, Ore., is here for a few days visiting his mother and brothers. Will is still in business in Oregon, and is succeeding much to the gratification of his many Charlevoix friends.

—There will be a Masonic school of instruction in Charlevoix March 20th, for the benefit of Charlevoix and Boyne City lodges. It is expected that the Grand Master will accompany the Grand Lecturer here.

—Dr. Levi Lewis, on a country professional trip Sunday lost a horse. While near town the animal stumbled and fell dead. The good, reliable old pioneer doctor is kept busy these days and is enjoying excellent health. The loss of a horse or two, more or less will not keep the doctor out of business.

—W. H. White, of Boyne City, who was looked upon as the logical candidate for the national Republican convention delegacy, has withdrawn from the race in favor of H. S. Hull, of Traverse City. Mr. White has long been an admirer of Hull and decided to withdraw as soon as Hull's candidacy was announced.

—The Librarian of the public library, has the following report to offer for the month of February. Number of fiction given out, 480; juvenile fiction, 455; philosophy, 1; religion, 17; sociology, 9; natural science, 6; fine arts, 2; literature, 8; history, 9; travel 12; biography, 8. Number of patrons enrolled during month, 57. Total number of patrons 547.

—The man who loves to hunt quail will find but little satisfaction when he puts his gun over his shoulder and visits the woods and fields of Michigan next summer. Reports coming in to State Game Warden Pierce indicate the heavy snow this winter has made it impossible for the birds to secure food, and they are dying off in large numbers, in many instances the farmers are feeding them.

—The joke is on us! Last week in noting the Shakspeare Study Club event of Thursday evening we covertly threw out a hint that an invitation to join that organization would be promptly accepted by the editor. We nearly fell dead when a man's estimate of the club came to us with the information that only ladies are eligible to membership, and only the husbands of the members are permitted to approach nearer than four blocks of the premises on the night of a meeting. Well, there are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamed of in your philosophy."

—Neither the Petoskey News nor the G. H. & I. roads will ask for an extension of time on the federal law which directs that no men concerned in the direction of trains shall work more than nine hours a day. The law goes into effect March 4, and both of these roads expect to be able to comply with the law. They will be able to do it, however, only by cutting down service and making two telegraph offices do the work of three. They will not cut out any sections, but a lot of order stations where no one but an operator is on duty will be eliminated, and there will be longer jumps between order stations. In addition, night service at many points where it is not given will be cut out.

—"The Little Prospector" at Charlevoix Theater tonight.

—Mrs. Hayles, wife of the Baptist pastor, is quite ill at her home.

—Robert Caldwell, of Traverse City, was here several days the past week.

—H. H. Bowen and wife of Petoskey, spent Sunday in the city, visiting friends and relatives.

—Superintendent Martindale and his force are busy adjusting the automatic fire alarm on the water tower.

—I. Z. Merriam, who has been confined to the house for the past two weeks with lagrippe, is improving and will soon be out again.

—The O. E. S. gave another of its most enjoyable dancing parties at Bank Hall last Friday night. Refreshments were served and joy was unrestrained.

—The L. C. P. A. gave a dance and supper to themselves and families at Bank Hall last Friday night. In the grand march and two-steps martial regulations and signals governed.

—Dr. G. W. Crozier, president of the Board of Education, and superintendent Woodley, are in Ypsilanti and Mt. Pleasant this week, in consultation with the Normal faculties of those schools, arranging for six teachers for the Charlevoix schools next year. There are that number of vacancies in the list of twenty-one teachers constituting the faculty.

—The Beaver Island mail carriers are having up-hill business there days. There has been no mail across for the past ten days. Last week Tuesday they started out from St. James, but found open water and were obliged to return. Tuesday afternoon they left again, with the purpose of remaining over night on Hog Island, and crossed yesterday, arriving there about two p. m.

—Seth S. Lobdell, well known as an old Charlevoix resident, arrived here Saturday, and is registered at the Hotel Bartlett. He will remain here as the general agent for Northern Michigan of the Crane Spring Steel Fence Co. Sam, who has many old time friends here, is still a victim of paralysis, but he is full of business yet, and should be given encouragement.

—The editor is in receipt of an invitation to attend a banquet of "Old Timers" at East Jordan tonight, and deeply regrets his inability to accept. There is no locality in Charlevoix county contiguous to which there are more early settlers than East Jordan. When the writer of this came to this section East Jordan was not on the map, but the region about our "South Arm" was then as it is now, one of the most promising in natural resources of any in this tier north. It would warm the cockles of our heart to meet some of the old fellows who chopped "propeller wood" and lived in tents and slippery elm bark in the old days.

—Federal officers are taking a hand in the enforcement of the pure food law and throughout the state grocers are being arrested for selling or offering for sale a certain brand of maple-blend syrup. It is said by government chemists that this syrup never saw a drop of genuine maple sweet. The sneaky approach is an extract made of maple bark that gives it a maple flavor, discernible only by people of fine taste. To the ordinary mortal it cannot be distinguished from the cane product, except in color. At the present time this syrup is on sale and the grocers who handle it are taking a chance of paying Uncle Sam a stiff fine for the privilege. All merchants have been warned against offering this product for sale.

"Under Which Flag?"

On Monday an anarchist entered the home of chief of police Shippy, of Chicago, and attempted to kill that official.

After the chief had seized the wretch, a son of the chief entered the room, and the anarchist broke loose, drew a revolver and shot the young man twice in the chest. His death is expected. Chief Shippy finally drew his own revolver and fired four bullets into the body of the assassin.

This act following so closely the killing of the Denver jeliet, should awaken the American people to the necessity of wiping out the vermin that infests society. Shall the red flag of anarchy be permitted longer to fling to the same atmosphere with the star-spangled banner?

This talk of the inherent right of free speech is getting to be some thing of a burlesque. Treatise every anarchist that opens his vile mouth, and kill the first man that flaunts a red rag in the face of honest men!

HYMENIAL.

The Happy Union of a Popular Young Charlevoix Couple.

The residence of Capt. and Mrs. P. D. Campbell, of this city, was the scene at high twelve Tuesday of the marriage of their only daughter, Jeannette Patience, to Mr. Arba Hilliard Cameron, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Cameron, also of this city.

Very much interest was centered in this happy union, because of the good qualities wrapped up in the persons of both these young people, and their popularity in the community. The invited guest, embracing relatives and personal friends of the two families filled the spacious parlors of the home.

Promptly at the appointed moment the young couple took their places beneath a bower of evergreen, smilax and ivy, embellished with Marguerites, and Rev. Dr. Wright spoke the words that united them in holy wedlock. The groom's best man was Harvey Campbell, brother of the bride, while beside the charming bride stood her friend and chum Miss Louise Matteson, of Whitehall. Little Miss Ruth Hubbard was ring bearer. As the party entered the parlors Miss Addie Holly played Mendelssohn's wedding march. No prettier marriage setting ever graced home or sanctuary, and no more charming couple ever graced the setting.

Congratulations came fast and furious, and then followed a five-course wedding breakfast. The bride's table, was profuse in floral decorations. The centre piece was a crystal bowl laden with fragrant Elysium. Side quartet tables were similarly embellished, and the hour was one of unrestrained jollity.

In the and joining room were spread the gifts of relatives and friends,—and were words fail us. Indeed a column of this paper could not record the infinite variety and entrancing beauty of the display. The gifts ranged from a good big pile of golden ducats from the master of the Beaver, and a good big check from the groom's father, through almost the entire realm of domestic necessity. Immaculate table linen, ormolu and cut glass table service, works of art and delicately fabricated lingerie,—indeed we were lost in an attempt to compass the limit of the tributes showered upon the happy young couple.

At two thirty Mr. and Mrs. Cameron left for Chicago, and they were followed to the station by the younger contingent of the assembled guests, a number accompanying them as far as Ellsworth. There was plenty of rice, and some luggage decoration by the bad boys of the bunch.

After a short visit with friends in Grand Rapids, Mr. and Mrs. Cameron will proceed to their home in Chicago, where Mr. Cameron has a responsible position in the civil engineering department of the American Bridge Co.

Long life, happiness and prosperity to Mr. and Mrs. Arba Hilliard Cameron. May time deal gently with them and the good Lord watch over them.

Warner Wishes to Compromise.

A story from Lansing says that Gov. Warner is quietly preparing to withdraw his candidacy for a third term and will support Aaron Mosselman, of Grand Rapids, for the nomination. The governor says he is not withdrawing, but that he has a plan he wants to see carried out. Briefly, it is claimed, he agrees to withdraw if the legislature will agree to vote his way at a special session. The bills in question are the ad valorem taxation and telephone and telegraph companies, anti-stock watering, anti-lobbying and a primary bill with the 40 per cent provision stricken out.

Are there any other matters that the governor would like to get a special session for? It may be that the legislature, in special session, would fall over itself to kill the governor's boom; but we doubt it.

Nobody cares a rap about the governor withdrawing from the field or not. He cannot be nominated for a third term under any conditions, and could not be elected if he was nominated.

—The A. Booth Co. has filed its new 125 horse tug, Bound Brook, and has begun filling the Pine Lake house. The ice harvest is still active, and will last another week, at least. More than fifty men, with a corresponding number of teams have been employed the past three weeks in this industry.

The Board of Public Works.

A petition is being circulated asking the council to submit to a popular vote, at the coming municipal election, the question of abolishing the Board of Public Works. The law provides that on the petition of one hundred free holders the council shall so submit.

We presume that among that number who shall sign this petition there will be those who understand the conditions existing with reference to public utilities, the council and the board of public works; but it is equally certain that there will be many who do not. Therefore, it is proper that we pause before giving approval to a proposition so radical as this.

In the first place, it is a step backward. Secondly, we do not believe there can be found one valid reason why it should be done. The board of public works, while possessing some power of independent action, that power is so limited that the board, practically, is little more than a committee of the common council. The board is merely an annex of the council created to regulate and control public utilities, relieving the council of a vast volume of detail. In all things the board is subject to the direction of the council.

The board of public works acts as a "buffer" between the people and the council. If anything goes wrong with the water or lighting plant, it is the board of public works that receives the castigation. If somebody's water or light is turned off, it is the board of public works that orders it; hence, the board of public works is a nuisance, and should be abolished.

Recently the board of public works readjusted the water rates, made in 1892. In the investigation preparatory to this work, many abuses and inequalities were discovered. Some were raised, others lowered. Then the board of public works was abolished.

More recently still, it was found that the city had a very large amount of money due it from users of water and light. The board justly decided that this was wrong, and adopted strenuous means to secure payment. Hence the board of public works should be abolished.

No member of the board receives one cent of compensation for his services. The abolishment of the board does not mean the saving of a dollar to the city. A new member is elected every spring, one retiring, and this permits the people to judge of the question of integrity and business ability. The present board has done good work, and, we think, deserves the thanks of the community.

It has been urged as an argument in favor of this movement that there is a conflict between the board of public works and the council. There is no conflict between these two bodies, as such. There may be, and we believe there is, a difference of opinion between the board and a small minority of the aldermen on certain questions. The same difference of opinion is liable to exist between members of the council itself.

Another fact is well worth remembering: Water and light rates in Charlevoix are lower than they are in two thirds of the cities and villages in Michigan, Indiana and Ohio, and the management and operation of the dual municipal plant will compare favorably with that of any plant in the territory indicated.

There is not a town within forty miles of Charlevoix that has a lighting plant that is not in trouble concerning the management and operation thereof; and in one we could mention, not twenty-five miles from us, the situation is serious.

Let us stop and consider, sanely and carefully, before we take a backward step in this matter.

—"The Little Prospector" is the most wholesome and cleanest type of western drama ever put together. It is a play of today of the better kind and will be seen at the Charlevoix Theater on Thursday March 5th.

"But dears! how don't some to say you are paid in proportion to the rottenness of the employer?"

"There ain't no one makin' a secret of it among friends," said Mipps. "We just hoo the land like with us. A very poor place it is, too. Leaky, wet, cold, and I says to him, says I, 'Give the ship an overhaulin,' says I. 'Well and good' says he, 'but I will mean so much off your wages,' says he, 'for the extra wage to a fitter.' I put it to him straight and strong, but he stuck at that. So there and so, we put our heads together and we 'greed it was better to take fifteen pounds out of the ship, than some dozen twelve pounds and fifteen."

"It is scandalous!" cried Tom Binns-Jones, in a voice of the most indignant pathos. "Well, I suppose, I shall be asked to sign a petition to Parliament, and offices which will cause me to have my feelings hurted, as if I hadn't enough to do already. Well, what's the use of talking? Let's have another glass of the same."

"Not—not—his wife?" cried Tom, apologizing to his friend and shipmate as a shave. "Not Miss Harrietta? Don't tell me that I'm to carry Miss Harriet?"

"That I'll do," said Mipps, in a sure enough.

"It is a fact—as infamous as?" Tom cried, hotly.

"Is it true?" Von Baumer answered seriously. "I do but say what I have heard, and heard more than once on good authority."

"If it is true there is villainy in it," said Tom, with wild eyes, "the blackest villainy that ever was done since Judas betrayed his Lord. Who is the villain? He ought to be hung, drawn and quartered and thrown into the bay. There was a rich sugar the dear. "Drive into London!" he cried, "Go to Scotland Yard! I am on fire to be there." The cabman swung on the box, and Tom pulled away as fast as the horse would go. Long before arrived, he had quarrelled with the cabman and was standing upon the step, ready to jump off the moment he had given his fare, and he had pulled up the worse off, and finished the heavy dose of his misdemeanor in?" he asked, as he shut evaporated at the door.

"Mr. Girdlestone!"

"Mr. Harlo, is, sir?"

"And when are they coming back?" he asked, in breathless.

"They are not coming back."

"Impossible!" Tom cried in despair. "I've got to give them fortune!"

"They have left no address. I am sorry I can't help you. Good-night, sir!" Tom Binns-Jones stood upon the doorstep looking blankly into the night. He felt dazed and bewildered. What fresh villainy was this? Was it a mere question of the fortune's report, or was it a contradiction of it? Could heads stand upon his finished as he thought of the possibility of such a thing. "I must find Mr." he cried, with clenched hands, and turned away heartsick into the turmoil and bustle of the London streets.

CHAPTER XIII.

Rebecca, the fresh-complexioned waiting maid, was still standing behind the mysterious hall door, listening, with a smile upon her face, to young Hinsdale's crooning footsteps, when another and a brisker trend caught her ear coming from the opposite direction. The smile died away as she heard it, and her features assumed a peculiar expression, which it would be hard to say whether fear or pleasure predominated. She pressed her hands up over her face and smoothed her hair with a quick, nervous gesture, glancing down at the same time at her snowy apron and the bright ribbons upon her dress. Then, as if all her hesitations may have been, she had no time to linger upon them, she had no time to be surprised in the door and Rose Girdlestone stepped into the hall. As she saw her maidservant's figure, for the gas was low, he uttered a hearty cry of joy, and stepped her hands towards the door post.

"Rebecca, my dear!" cried Tom Binns-Jones, "I could not have believed it."

"It's done every day, and will be while there is insurance among the poor," said Mipps. "Leaky ship, wet cold, and I'm sure I'm only doing to turn off. Wherever her intentions may have been, she had no time to improve

A DESPERATE FIGHTER

Courage and Daring of Colonel James Bowie.

HIS DEATH IN THE ALAMO.

Dramatic End of This Brave, Generous and Determined Spirit—The Way He Fought Fighter Once Protected a Preacher in Texas.

One fine summer morning in 1833—for what time was mean and time problems of the new republic of Mexico—a small party of Kentucky crossed the Sabine river about sixty miles from its mouth and entered Texas territory. Most of them were clad in buckskin and armed with rifles, pistols and bowie-knives, rough, determined looking crowd, with two notable exceptions, one clean shaven, dark skinned, wiry a bright, restless eye that seemed to wander constantly, as if in search of an enemy, and the other a small, gold-haired man, whose great and expressive brown eyes dreamed of peace. These two were riding in front, talking earnestly of the convention which had just been held at San Felipe de Austin and of the possibility that Texas might soon be become an independent state. Suddenly some one in the party behind them started a song with a memorable chorus—

"Come and listen to my story while we wait for the grand review."

This is the one that always wakes us.

From that jingling rhyme some dubbed the Texan "Texas." Certain it is that this great man had lived in and adopted Texas a fugitive "who left his country for his country's good." That prince of phrases had laid aside for a time his Cicero-like tongue and gone among Cincinnati pigs to learn the art of pleasing a Texan audience. Hence the chorus.

The little band jogged on and finally reached the municipality of San Augustine, then a mere collection of rude log huts, with one or two adobe structures of the Spanish aristocracy. Here the preacher pitched a tent for the day. Heavy blasphemers of the Methodist persuasion would hold a meeting in the evening. At the hour named the house was crowded to overflowing with rough, desperate men, all armed and ready for any fun or fray that might pose on such a novel occasion. The minister gave out a hymn, and it was sung with spirit. Then came the text, but not another word would the preacher heed. They hooted and yelled, shot off their pistols, crowed and heaved in imitation. The flannel was shaf'ning. The quiet little preacher stood his ground bravely, though in his heart he must be sore well out of it. With dishevelled hair and coat-tails forced his way to the front, still carrying his Bible and a huge knife in his belt. The wild cheer that broke from the crowd sounded in the ears of the preacher, but he quietly mounted the table, the levels of a pack of wolves or the yells of Indians hungry for scalps. But instead of jumping upon him this strange man, with restless eyes flashing and long black hair streaming over his shoulders, jumped on a bench and, throwing his hat to the ground, shouted in a stentorian voice: "Men, this man has come to preach to you! You need preaching to, and I'll be blasted if he didn't preach to you! The next man who disturbs him small sight and I'm name is Jim Bowie!"

The effect was magical. With quick, respectful attention the rough audience listened to the sermon, joined heartily in the closing hymn, and not a few persons came up to shake hands with the little man and apologize for the rough reception they had given him. A month later at the first camp meeting held in Texas some of those to whose members of the church, and in the conversion of the first Protestant house of worship in the republic was laid in San Augustine.

The man whose timely aid proved so effective was Colonel James Bowie, and the knife in his belt was the noted "bowie knife," given to him by his brother, Rezin P. Bowie. It was made of a large file, strong, of admirable temper and gave its name to a family of terrible weapons not yet extinct. Colonel Bowie lived for the first time in the Alamo, and he writes in his journal: "While we were conversing Colonel Bowie had occasion to show his famous knife, and I wish I may be shot if the bare sight of it wasn't enough to give a man of a squeamish stomach the ceilies. He saw I was admired it and said, he, 'Colonel, you notice it is not made for nothing. One night (this a long time ago) I was set upon by six Indians at the Big Bend of the Arkansas, and I killed every mother's son of them with this knife.'"

Brave, generous, determined and enterprising, James Bowie sought adventure for its lucrative, and he was naturally among the first to take up arms for Texas independence. Three more desperate men were never brought together than Travis, Crockett and Bowie as they took their last stand within the walls of the Alamo. Sick and helpless in bed on that last terrible day, Jim Bowie died fighting. As a Mexican ran forward to kill him he fired his pistol by a supreme effort, caught his assailant by the hair, plunged the fatal knife into his heart and fell back dead.

When the story of his death was told to his mother in Louisiana, she said: "I am sure Jim never died with a wound in his back," and, with a quiet smile, turned again to her household duties.—Ex. Image.

Gratitude is a fine virtue, and yet it is overdone when it cries beyond dog bounds.—Lo Sage.

LYDIA DARRACH.

Loxley House, Philadelphia, Where She Played Lavendopper.

One of the favorite stories connected with the Revolution is the tale of Lydia Darrach's patriotism. Unfortunately, like others of similar import, has been discredited by the disciplinarians historian. Notwithstanding the doubt thrown upon the tradition it remains popular with all who know it. The house where the famous eaves-dropping on the part of the Quakeress took place is not so well known.

Those who have heard or read the story of Mrs. Darrach hardly need to be informed that she and her husband lived in what was called the Loxley house, once at the southeast corner of Little Dock and Second streets. Little Dock was the thoroughfare which came in a southwestern direction from Dock street to Second street. The ground upon which the Loxley house stood was acquired by Benjamin Loxley, a well to do citizen, who owned practically a whole square in this vicinity, from George Clymer in 1765. In 1768 the great little house was erected immediately. It was a speculation, for there is nothing to show that the owner ever lived there.

The house gained its fame from its peculiar facade, which was unlike anything in the city, and from the incidents which connected Mrs. Darrach with the place. The great preacher Whitefield is said to have delivered the soulfitters from the balcony on other his visits to or around this city in the country—1763 or 1765.

The Revolution had long since been over and most of the patriots in their graves before the tale of Mrs. Darrach's bold adventure—when it happened is to have saved Washington and his army from capture by Lord Cornwallis—was known. In the first summer of the first volume of the American Quarterly Review, issued in March, 1827, the tale was told for the first time. There it is credited to "Gordon's American Revolution." Gordon's work, begun with an arbitrary marking, beginning with 32 degrees, because so it was known that the lowest degree of degrees more before coming to what he thought the extreme cold resulting from a mixture of ice, water and saltammonia. In 1724 he published a dictionary on the subject of his experiments and the conclusions that had resulted therefrom.

Celsius of Stockholm seen after suggested the more rational division of a hundred degrees between freezing and boiling point. This was the centigrade thermometer. Reaumur proposed another grg, also which has been adopted by the French, but by far the largest part of the civilized world Fahrenheit's scale has been preferred and used, with 32 degrees as freezing, 55 degrees as temperate, 96 degrees as blood heat, and 212 degrees as boiling point.

It is true that the zero of Fahrenheit's scale is a solecism since it does not mark the extreme to which heat can be abstracted. This little blemish, however, does not seem to have been any great practical consequence.

Arctic explorers have persisted in the order and temperature below the zero of Fahrenheit, and scientists have produced artificially temperatures far low may ever dreamed of by the thermometer maker of Amsterdam. There is a point in the year of the death of Fahrenheit, but it is generally placed in 1740.—Los Angeles Times.

Sun Power.

There is one source to which all minds recover when this question is mentioned, a source most promising and yet one which has so far eluded the investigator. The sun on a clear day delivers upon each square yard of the earth's surface the equivalent of approximately one horsepower of mechanical energy working continuously. If even a fraction of this power could be transformed into mechanical or electrical energy and stored it would do the world's work. Here is power delivered at our very door without cost. How to store the energy so generously furnished and keep it on tap for future use is the problem. That the next half century will see some solution thereof, seems likely.—H. S. Pritchett in Atlantic.

Victoria and Lady Millais.

It is stated that when Sir John Millais fell ill Queen Victoria sent the Princess Louise to the dying man to inquire what lady she could address that could alleviate his sorrow? Sir John thereupon called for his writing tablet and hoarsely gasped out the words, "I should like the queen to see my wife." Then the queen broke through her rule that was to receive any woman whose marriage she had been once dissolved, whether there be blame or not, graciously accorded to the request and accosted the sorely tried lady a tender and sympathetic interview.—St. James' Gazette.

Ambitions.

The toiler in the city had been given an advance in salary. "Now," he said jubilantly, "I can begin saving to buy a farm."

The agriculturist looked at the news and shook his head. "Not yet. Another such crop or two and I can move into the city," he mused.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE THERMOMETER.

It Was Invented by a Poor Man Who Had Failed as a Merchant.

There is one little instrument in which the interest of all classes of people in this country never diminishes through all the changing seasons of the year, from the first day of January to the last day of December. It regulates the business pulse of the nation and is the barometer which keeps the time of all occupations. And this little instrument is the thermometer, which bears the name of Fahrenheit.

Before the seventeenth century seemed only judge of the amount of heat prevailing at any place by his own sensations and could only speak of the weather in a very indefinite way as hot or very hot, cold or very cold. In that century several attempts were made by scientific experimenters to make of tubes containing oil, spirits of wine and other substances to establish a satisfactory means of measuring heat, but none of them proved successful. Even Sir Isaac Newton, who appears as a great deal of this work, and also the noted astronomer, Halley, failed in their attempts to produce a heat measurer.

It was reserved to Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit, an obscure and poor man, who had just been able to give to the world the instrument which has proved to be so serviceable to mankind. He had failed in business as a merchant and, having a fine taste for mechanics and chemistry, began a series of experiments for the production of instruments for the purpose of measuring the temperature of the atmosphere. At first he made these instruments with alcohol, but soon became convinced that the scientific world was a more suitable article to use in the glass tube.

Fahrenheit had removed from Dantzic to Amsterdam, and there about the year 1720 he made the mercury thermometer which has ever since been known by the name of Fahrenheit.

The basis of his plan was to mark on the tube the point at which water would be congealed and called it the point of zero. Then he began with an arbitrary marking, beginning with 32 degrees, because so it was known that the lowest degree of degrees more before coming to what he thought the extreme cold resulting from a mixture of ice, water and salt-ammonia. In 1724 he published a dictionary on the subject of his experiments and the conclusions that had resulted therefrom.

Celsius of Stockholm seen after suggested the more rational division of a hundred degrees between freezing and boiling point. This was the centigrade thermometer. Reaumur proposed another grg, also which has been adopted by the French, but by far the largest part of the civilized world Fahrenheit's scale has been preferred and used, with 32 degrees as freezing, 55 degrees as temperate, 96 degrees as blood heat, and 212 degrees as boiling point.

It is true that the zero of Fahrenheit's scale is a solecism since it does not mark the extreme to which heat can be abstracted. This little blemish, however, does not seem to have been any great practical consequence.

Arctic explorers have persisted in the order and temperature below the zero of Fahrenheit, and scientists have produced artificially temperatures far low may ever dreamed of by the thermometer maker of Amsterdam. There is a point in the year of the death of Fahrenheit, but it is generally placed in 1740.—Los Angeles Times.

Sun Power.

There is one source to which all minds recover when this question is mentioned, a source most promising and yet one which has so far eluded the investigator. The sun on a clear day delivers upon each square yard of the earth's surface the equivalent of approximately one horsepower of mechanical energy working continuously. If even a fraction of this power could be transformed into mechanical or electrical energy and stored it would do the world's work. Here is power delivered at our very door without cost. How to store the energy so generously furnished and keep it on tap for future use is the problem. That the next half century will see some solution thereof, seems likely.—H. S. Pritchett in Atlantic.

Victoria and Lady Millais.

It is stated that when Sir John Millais fell ill Queen Victoria sent the Princess Louise to the dying man to inquire what lady she could address that could alleviate his sorrow? Sir John thereupon called for his writing tablet and hoarsely gasped out the words, "I should like the queen to see my wife." Then the queen broke through her rule that was to receive any woman whose marriage to he had been once dissolved, whether there be blame or not, graciously accoded to the request and accosted the sorely tried lady a tender and sympathetic interview.—St. James' Gazette.

What Would You Do

If three good physicians should pronounce your case hopeless. If they should decide that you could not live longer than six weeks. And if you should get well after using only $12.00 worth of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine, what would you advise a friend in like condition to do?

If have to thank you for saving my life. My case was pronounced by three of the most noted physicians in this county to be hopeless. I had dropsy, heart trouble, smothering spells, could not lie down for fear of suffocation, and had swelled to a size that I could not wear my clothes. I was given up to die. Your Heart Cure and Nervine saved my life. I was able to do my work in two days after I began taking your medicine. I feel like a new man. NEGLECTED BAYBERRIES.

Time Was When the Crop Was Eagerly Harvested.

Years ago when the first frosts befell come Connecticut people went out to pick the bunches of bayberries to make the pale green wax candles which burning gave out the aromatic smell of the leaves that had plenty crushed in pulling off.

We no longer pick bayberries for company candles for the winter time. Except a few romantic souls who gather berries enough to make a candle or two for old times, a few faddists who want to try to make bayberry candles by some discovery or other in a magazine and some staunch old New Englanders who have to get out in the pastures on a crisp fall day—these are all who gather the bayberries now.

Left to themselves, the clumps of bushes have spread out and in some places overrun whole pastures. In some parts of Connecticut the bushes have grown very tall.

In Branford, on the coast, there are some bayberry trees as many can be found growing along the highways ten feet tall and some even taller. Those bayberries must be very old. You can hardly wondering how many years have been picked off them in years past.

As early as 1717 the town records show that the gathering of bayberries on the highways and commons was forbidden before Sept. 15. A fine of 10 shillings for each violation was the penalty. It happened that the way from the berries was used in making a blacking and a salve and the bayberry wax continued an article of trade in Branford down to the last fifty years.

Human nature being about the same one century to another, there was probably in 1717 a great deal complaining of people who picked the berries "before they were half ripe and in the morning before anybody else was a-year." Now the question and the time.

But what a treasure buried bayberry pickings it must have been the morning of Sept. 15—Hartford Courant.

DANGEROUS FISH.

Ways of the Green Moray of Bermuda and the Devilfish.

When one speaks of dangerous fish the first that come to mind are the shark and the octopus. But neither of these really formidable to fishermen. The shark never attacks a boat and the octopus very rarely.

A much worse creature than either shark or octopus is the devilfish—large ray that is common in the warm waters of the Atlantic. This fish grows to a weight of a ton and a half and has a mouth armed with teeth, is armed with a horrible barbed and poisoned sting, which it has often been known to attack boats.

A fishing party in a launch succeeded in harpooning one of these fish in the bay known as Arrants Pass. The fish, The brute towed them eighteen miles out to sea and very nearly upset the launch. It was twenty-five feet long and weighed 3,600 pounds.

A very rare creature is the green moray of Bermuda. This rather resembles a conger eel, but is much more swiftness. An English marine officer, following a wounded moray for two hours, hooked a large specimen and began to pull it in.

His negro boatman, his eyes staring with fright, begged him to stop. The moray, the officer said, at first refused, but when he saw the fish was too heavy for him, he cut the line. The officer was then

FIRST NEW KLONDYKE GOLD FIELD

Sand on Vancouver Island Said to Be Unequaled in Riches.

If news brought in Victoria, B. C., proves correct the new Klondyke island will add a stupendous little nugget to the story of the Klondyke gold rush. In the bench sands of Wreck Bay, at Skidegate, on the west side, a bank of sand ten feet high has been found, which, friends claim, is gold. Walter Myles, of the town of Cobleskill and Vulcan, has had numerous assayers and experts, and results are said to be pretty the solid yellow metal. The sand runs for 15 miles on the island and the yield varies from $15.20 to $101.60 a ton. On being furnished with assay figures Myles staked out eight claims. "In all my experience in Colorado and Yukon I have never known this equaled," said Myles. "Near the beach sands there is a plentiful supply of water, and every natural circumstance is favorable for cleaning up gold."

Boat Invades Flooded Cornfield to Save Farmers and Stock—Sickness Follows Privation.

The flood throughout the Ohio valley, caused by heavy rains and melting snows, is reported to be the biggest since 1898. Lives have been lost, homes, bridges and fences swept away, and crops and roads ruined. Hundreds of families have been driven from their homes in Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Ohio, Wheeling and another streams have all contributed to the destruction which has moved down the Mississippi to ward the Gulf of Mexico.

Pittsburg, perhaps, has been the greatest sufferer from the flood, which has been sweeping down the valley. Any one acquainted with the history of the Smoky City knows what Pittsburg is annually, and sometimes several times a year, a victim of high water. The Monongahela and Allegheny rivers, uniting to form the Ohio, sweep through a narrow valley and when the waters of the mountains and highlands come down in the spring, they are joined by a prolonged River of turbulent rolling the food of twenty more states. Hence, the rise point between the rivers, time from dating more or less of the city.

At the junction of the Ohio and Wabash rivers flood suffer the abandoned other homes to the rising waters and fled to the hills. Here they have been quartered in barns, sheds and deserted buildings and as a result of the exposure and privation pneumonia has become prevalent.

People along the lower Ohio River have prepared for the worst. In Paducah, Ky., Nearly a hundred families on the Indiana side, opposite Cairo, Ill., have been removed. The big Ohio River steamer City of Spottsville put across a midnight and brought out several families, with 200 head, pigs, mules and fifty cattle. The rescued stock had to be kept from taking to terror and fought incessantly to keep their stock from drowning. Louisville, Shawneetown, Ill., are in precisely the same lies been weakened by the excessive rain and the three floods in last year. A constant watch is being kept on the levees.

The Evansville and Terre Haute Railway Company has been anxious about the safety of its roundhouse which parallels White River, and thousands of logs filled with sand have been placed to strengthen it. This place is known as the "Black Hole" because of the disagreeable of a flood.

STOESSEL FOUND GUILTY

Sentenced to Die for Surrender of Port Arthur, but Imprisonment Is Recommended.

HELD COWARD AND TRAITOR.

General Fock Reprimanded and Smirnoff and Reiss Acquitted After Trial.

At St. Petersburg Lieutenant General Stoessel was condemned to death by a military court for the surrender of Port Arthur to the Japanese. General Fock, who commanded the Fourth East Siberian division of Port Arthur, was ordered reprimanded for a disciplinary offence. Lieutenant Colonel Smirnoff and Major General Reiss, chief of staff to General Stoessel, were acquitted of the charges against them for lack of proof.

The court recommended that the death sentence upon Lieutenant General Stoessel be commuted to ten years' imprisonment in a fortress and that he be excluded from the service.

For his services in the campaign against the Boxers in 1900 Stoessel was made a Baronial general and was given Port Arthur, where he began strengthening the works. Little dreaming at the time that he would be called upon to defend the place against the assaults of the Japanese. In February, 1904, when the war broke out, Port Arthur became the center of the conflict. For five long months Stoessel and his men held out for nearly twenty years before he was compelled to surrender. At first he was given great praise by the Russians. Emperor Nicholas conferred upon him the title of aide-de-camp to the Czar and the Czarina Emperor gave him an order. Then came a reverse in his fortunes. Stoessel was appointed to investigate the surrender of Port Arthur and was soon dismissed from the army and shot. His trial followed. General Stoessel's defense was that he "without the loss of rights or honor." he generally regarded as the hero of the siege of Port Arthur. It is expected he will be pardoned after a brief imprisonment.

WORK OF CONGRESS

In the Senate Tuesday the Aldrich bill was opposed by Mr. Simon of Missouri. He urged the adoption of the plan of government guarantee of deposits in national banks. Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, brought back occasion to oppose that proposition. Senator Aldrich declared that a time for prior legislation should be made in the interest of the people. Senator Bailey said that there was little national banks. The bill will be taken up for consideration during a couple of hours. Speaker Cannon's ruling that bills can be given a hearing in the House when Mr. Bonnell of Illinois brought up issues to the floor to be classed as "hot" bonus speech. His remarks were directed against the Democratic and Republican conventions of Mr. Cannon's home district in the House. Most of the day was taken up by a discussion of the bill to provide for water in the next course.

A speech by Senator Johnston of Alabama on the Aldrich currency bill and a statement by Senator Hale, chairman of the committee on naval affairs, concerning the proposed investigation of charges of fraud in the navy yards, were the chief subjects of interest before the Senate Wednesday. The bill was before the talking of the thirteenth day. Senator Johnston said the bill contained nothing of value. He said it was the result of numerous amendments offered by Democrats, and that it was imperfect in every respect. He said the bill was "the offspring of the Republican party." Senator Hale said the charges of fraud in the navy yards had been investigated by the committee on naval affairs, and that the committee had found no evidence of fraud. The Senate adjourned a few minutes after convening Thursday morning out of respect to the memory of Senator Carmack, of Tennessee, who died in Washington Wednesday night. SENATOR SMITH AND THE NATIVES.

Northern Michigan Indians Make a Raid on Washington.

Traverse City special: "For God's sake, call off your Indians."

The foregoing appeal, written by Senator William Alden Smith to a local state official and revealed today, explains why for a month now the Indians of Leelanau county have been sitting in their houses contentedly starving. These Indians are fascinated by a dream of gold which their representatives, Jim Paul of Omena and Simon Kiigoshkawi of Harbor Springs, have gone to Washington to get for them.

For years the Indians of the Ottawa and Chippewa tribes in this region have believed that under ar. old treaty they would receive between $75,000 and $100,000 from the government. Paul and Simon, knowing the child-like nature of their brethren, about a month ago circulated among them and explained that the government would turn over the money if somebody went for it.

Their appeal for car fare was readily answered and the trip to Washington made, Simon and Paul both going broke shortly after they landed there, and, appealing to the Michigan senator and Congressman McLaughlin, who represented their district, for aid, the representatives giving up repeatedly.

In the meantime, the Leelanau county Indians began to lay down their axes and return to their homes. They were men of money and it was beneath the dignity of such to labor. They have been waiting a month now and no idea they can be induced to go to work at once seems will undoubtedly ensue, as none of them can afford to leaf.

As for their claim, investigation at Washington, it is said, has failed to reveal any foundation for it.

LATER.

The Traverse City Evening Record is in receipt of a telegram from Congressman James C. McLaughlin in answer to the one sent Friday asking for information regarding the claim of the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of Michigan. The telegram is as follows:

"Have just been able to get state papers from Indian commissioner. Court of claims rendered judgment in favor of Ottawas and Chippewas. Congress will appropriate necessary money to be paid after roll of beneficiaries has been made."

It is believed that the sum is about $150,000, and the number of Ottawas and Chippewas in Michigan have been estimated at about 5,000. The money is the outcome of a treaty made with the Indians on March 28, 1836, between the United States and the Ottawa and Chippewa tribes of Michigan, through their representatives and delegates.

Many of the older Indians remember the story told by the chiefs upon their return from Washington, the chiefs declaring that they had not signed the treaty until they had been forced to do so in order to return to their families who were suffering for want of food.

Many and exciting were the stories told by these chiefs about their experiences in Washington, and improbable as they were, the people believed them. The chiefs were not willing to sell their rights in their hunting and wished to reserve land included in boundaries as follows: From Boordman river as far south as Grand river, thence to Muskegon, thence north to Big Rapids.

496 VOTES FOR TAFT

Five More Than are Necessary to Nominate Him.

With only about 40 delegates actually hunted down, the Taft managers now assert that the secretary will have a majority on the first ballot, beyond any doubt whatever. Their claims are based on the indorsements by state central committees, congressional committees and reliable reports from states where the Taft element is absolutely in control.

On the basis of the call issued by the national committee the next convention will consist of 980 delegates, making 491 necessary to a choice. The Taft managers claim that official estimates and semi-official indorsements of political committees to date given them 496 votes, or five more than a clear majority.

The negative won in the debate.

Mayme Scroggie substituted for Miss Weatherwax in the Central building Thursday and Friday of last week.

Lesh Persons substituted for Miss Crowell in the Central building Thursday and Friday of last week. Miss Crowell was ill with the grippe.

Bessie Cramer spent Saturday and Sunday at her home near Boyne Falls.

Miss Mayfred Stacks, Mrs. Fred. Heilinger, Miss Maud Cross and Miss Lois Mason visited the Normal class Thursday afternoon of last week. Miss Mason was a member of the class of '06.

No Like In Life.

"I have found out that there is no one in life of long duration as long as you can get Dr. King's New Discovery," says Mrs. J. C. White, of Hushoriu, Pa. "I would not be alive to-day only for that wonderful medicine." It removes up a cough quicker than anything else, and cures long standing cases after the case is pronounced hopeless." This pure vegetable remedy for coughs and colds, la-grippe, asthma, bronchitis and insomnia, is sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Good For Everybody.

Mr. Norman H. Coulter, a prominent architect, in the Deifert Building, San Francisco says: "I fully endorse all that has been said of Electric Bitters as a tonic medicine. It is good for everybody. It corrects stomach, liver and kidney disorders in a prompt and efficient manner and builds up the system." Electric Bitters is the best spring medicine ever sold over a druggist's counter; as a blood purifier it is unequaled. 50c. at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Cadillac News: Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Bader have a fine 7-pound son, born Thursday. A Caesarian section operation was performed. The operation was performed at 8 o'clock in Mercy Hospital and was most successfully made. Such an operation has been performed in Michigan but a very few times and is considered one of the most difficult pieces of surgery heard of in this day of surgical miracles. A surgeon naturally feels pleased when he has successfully gone through such a crisis. The mother and babe in this case are both doing nicely. The sisters at the hospital are delighted that in their institution such a rare operation was performed so successfully. In no small hospital in Michigan was the caesarian ever before attempted. The operation was made by Drs. S. C. Moore, C. E. and G. D. Miller.

Elk Rapids Progress: Word was received from the U. of M. Saturday that the dog that brought strychnine to Milton residents last week was a victim of hydrophobia. This information started everyone who had been attacked by the dog for Ann Arbor to take the Pasteur treatment. Tuesday morning Mrs. Alfa Powell left with her brother Lawrence, aged seven, and Jackson Warner, aged thirteen, son of Fred Warner. Janet Miller also of Milton left on Monday, and John Edwards, of Atwood, went last Thursday. We believe others have gone but have been unable to verify reports. In our last week's report not half justice was done, for the truth was far worse than report, contrary to all precedence. Several dogs of that township, Torch Lake and Banks have shown symptoms of rabies and have been killed. In the village the dog seen on the streets without a muzzle is summarily shot, and an enumeration of the dogs taken in the near future would show a decided falling off in the canine population. Probably never in the history of this section has anything occupied that has brought so much of fear and uncertainty. Many of those not bitten, but related to those who were are suffering more intensely than the victims. News of the affair has traveled far and wide, and like a snowball has gathered as it moved. One can hear almost anything, but what to believe is the question. There is and has been much exaggeration and there will continue to be until the excitement dies. Saturday, following the mad dog scare in Milton Township the village officials took immediate action and posted notices warning owners of dogs that all dogs found running at large without muzzling would be summarily shot, and the marshal and night watch are on a hunting expedition. If it is known that the mad dog was about town before the trouble in Milton.

Death of Mrs. Mary P. Burns.

This most excellent lady, the mother of Horace S. Harsha, of this city, was for many years a resident of Charlevoix, and built and occupied the Clinton street residence afterward owned and occupied by Rev. Dr. Hyslop. Below we append, from the Traverse City papers, the particulars of her death and character.

Traverse City Eagle: Mrs. Mary P. Burns, aged 83, died at the home of her son, Wm. Harsha, 903 Union street, this morning at 11:20. She had been ill for some time with cancer of the stomach. She was born in Allegheny county Pennsylvania, March 19, 1825, and moved to Ohio some time later. She was united in marriage twice, both husbands having died. Mrs. Burns moved to northern Michigan in 1873, and since that time has been a resident of Fife Lake, Charlevoix and this city, moving here in 1878, where she has since resided. She joined the Presbyterian church in childhood, but as there was no church of that denomination in this city at the time she moved here, she joined the Congregational. She was always an earnest Christian worker and never failed in doing what she thought was her duty. The following are the children who survive her: Supervisor W. F. Harsha of this city; H. S. Harsha, Charlevoix; Mrs. David McEath, Clinton, Ind.; H. A. Burns, Broadland, Ill.; Ed. M. Burns, Chicago; Clarence M. Burns, city. She also leaves one brother, W. H. Fife of this city, and four sisters, none of whom reside here. The funeral will be held from the residence of her son, 903 South Union street, Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment will take place at Oakland.

LATER.

Traverse City Eagle: The late Mrs. Mary P. Burns was laid to rest this afternoon, services being conducted at the home of her son, William F. Harsha, 903 South Union street, by the Rev. D. Chohlin, assisted by the Hev. T. Boyd Gay.

A choir sang "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," "Lead, Kindly Light," and "Nearer My God, to Thee."

The Rev. Mr. Gay stated that Mrs. Burns, before her death, selected certain passages from John 14, which she wanted used after her death and at her funeral, being verses 1, 2 and 3, and part of the sixth. The first three verses were taken by the Rev. Mr. Gay as his text, he speaking in particular of "Let not your heart be troubled," in which he said that "heart" was the pivotal word; that the heart may be troubled, or happy and joyful, and in fact is the pivotal point of the human life.

The fact that Jesus was speaking to His disciples was taken up, showing that He was speaking to His heart while in trouble, and that He recognized the fact that His disciples would have trouble to pass through and vexations in their lives.

The speaker said that Mrs. Burns wanted to express these words to her friends, "Let not your heart be troubled," and showed her great faith in Christ and His promises and that she wanted her friends to have the same unswerving faith. The beautiful home to which she had been called was described and the fact that Mrs. Burns was a joint heir with Christ and that it was no wonder that she chose those words before her death.

In closing, Mr. Gay spoke a few words to the relatives, saying that instead of shedding tears they should sing praises to Him, that those who lived and die in Him are better off than those who are living, and that she had lived her allotted time.

The Rev. D. Cochlin took up the thread, "I am the way," etc. He spoke of the disciples and how they had the way pointed out to them and that Mrs. Burns had found this way, which should be a comfort to her friends and neighbors. She had no fear or doubt of the future.

Her beautiful character as a mother and friend were spoken of. She ministered to many in want, need and sickness, and above all she did everything with a cheerful presence, a grace that possessed by many and be told of by her was her presence was a help and joy.

STILL SKATING.

Allie Moore, the Charlevoix Roller Skater, Still Making Records in the West.

The editor is in receipt of a letter from Allie Moore, who never misses an opportunity to announce himself as "the Charlevoix Boy." Allie was at Waterloo, Iowa, resting up for a series of races to come off at Minneapolis, beginning next Monday.

The first race is with Harley Davidson, for the championship of the world for the "small track record"—held now by Moore. Moore and Davidson are to skate a series of races at the River View Rink, Chicago, some time in May, for the "big track" championship of the world—an honor also now held by Moore.

The Minneapolis races are to continue every night for a week.

Charlevoix people take much interest in the success of Allie Moore. The boy is not only of ideal athletic mould, but is an up-and-up good young man. We append below a clipping from a Waterloo paper:

"Allie Moore again defeated Joe Minch at the Coliseum roller rink last night, by making the 16-lap mile in 2:56. The time is the fastest that has been made on the local floor and gives the championship to Moore, after winning two of the three races, the winner of which was at stake. Clark, Pitt and Fransou, other contestants in the race, were forced to fall out as the pace set by the winners was too strenuous for the untrained men.

By making the mile in 2:56, Moore establishes a record equal to that made by Cockrum in St. Louis last year, and also gives him a claim on the championship on a 16 lap mile track. The time that holds the world's record was made on a 7-lap track.

The time last night would have undoubtedly been much closer had not a collision between the two contestants cleared them to lose a few seconds. In the fourteenth lap, Moore clashed into Minch and both men fell to the floor. The time lost in getting started and regaining speed, would undoubtedly have lowered the time to close to the world's record time of 2:50.

Tomorrow night Moore and Minch will enter a pursuit race. The men will start from opposite sides of the track and race against time. The pursuit race will eliminate all chance of collision."

Law Upheld by Supreme Court.

There has been some question in the past whether the law prohibiting the sale of liquor to Indians as given below would stand. Indians being citizens. In a recent case from Cass County carried to Supreme Court the law was upheld.

Sec. 5191 C. L. prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to any Indian, or any person of Indian descent. Prohibits such sale to any person of mixed white and Indian blood, or to persons with Indian blood in their veins.

It is within the police power of the legislature to punish the sale of liquor to a citizen of the state and of the United States"

Prosecuting Attorney Clink has notified all saloons that the law will be strictly enforced.

Historical Society.

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet next Friday evening, March 13th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Lewis with the following program:

The New Life Saving Service Law.

Under the law recently enacted: Keepers of the life saving service get a raise of $268 per year; number one surfmen a raise of $14 per month, and ordinary surfmen a raise of $9.00 per month.

C. H. Gardner & Son of Williamsburg, have increased the number of business enterprises in the village by the establishment of a grist mill. It is a circular frame plant and is of sufficient capacity to meet the local requirements.

MOVING IN

The Rebuilt and Improved Court House Ready for Business.

Although the county clerk has continued to do business at the old stand in the court house every day since the fire, the rest of the building has been unmolestable. The jail was the first to be occupied, soon after the fire; the treasurer and register moved back a week ago, and are settled.

And now the second story, which contains the court room, Judge's office, and the offices of the sheriff and Judge of probate, are practically ready for occupancy. Next Monday Judge Mayne will call court, and every officer will be doing business in former quarters—but in quarters that are greatly improved.

Yesterday Sheriff McWain and Under Sheriff Weiskel had six county prisoners scrubbing floors and laying the heavy cork matting that will cover all the upper floors but the Judges office. Chas. E. See the contractor on this latter job, was working with the other prisoners, as naturally as could be.

There are very few court rooms in Northern Michigan that will excel, in any particular that of Charlevoix county. The walls are calcomined in drab, with cream ceiling. The audience room will be seated with opera chairs, but it is doubtful if they will arrive in time for this term of court. Temporary desks will also have to be used by the Judge, clerk and reporter this term. A new desk, combining that of the Judge with those of the clerk and reporter, has been ordered, and will be ready for use at the May term. This arrangement moves the clerk from the old place in the corner to the immediate right of the Judge.

The Judge's study is the only room occupied up stairs. This is tastefully furnished, and on imitation hardwood floor are bright rugs, to match the disposition and attainments of his honor. The adjoining offices are furnished and furnished to correspond. Very radical changes have been made in the closets, both above and below. New plumbing and new appliances are furnished throughout, including elaborate lavatories. To the sheriff's office has been added a cosy and comfortable sleeping room for books and records. It is in the attic, and is reached by a stairway that is ingeniously concealed from hotel to the ceiling, out of the way, when not in use. In every way the Charlevoix county court house is one hundred per cent better in all respects than it was before the fire.

Contractor Jones began yesterday to place the metal cornice, and the work will be completed this week. It is expected that the city will take advantage of the proposition of the county to erect a tower for the fire-alarm bell that did service there before the fire.

BLACK AZTEC CORN
A Valuable Find For Farmers—Extra Large, Jet Black and Contains More Sugar Than Yellow Corn.
Because of its large percentage of sugar and general superior quality over yellow corn the black corn which was grown around Durango, Colo., last summer and which was seeded from grain found in the ancient Aztec ruins now threatens to replace the ordinary grain.
This was without doubt the most remarkable agricultural discovery of recent times. It was Louis Smith, a photographer, who, while digging about in the crumbling ruins, came upon a huge earthen jar, tightly covered. Opening it he found it filled with shelled corn, black and shiny. While these kernels have lain for centuries in the ruins the germ of life still existed, the jar having been hermetically sealed.
Last year an acre of ground was seeded with this corn. It came up and flourished. The ears were of unusual size and black as coal. Scores of farmers have seeded for next year's planting. The corn is sweet and tender.

—The adjourned February term of court begins next Monday with a calendar that will probably occupy the attention of the court a week, or longer.

A CONAN DOYLE

"I am sorry I have been rude, but I did think, knowing the old lady, "I have been down at the docks all day, and have been busy and worried."

Mrs. Lemmidge was sitting in her chair beside the fire knitting when her son came in. At the sound of his voice she glanced anxiously out at his face, with all her motherly instincts on the alert.

"What is the matter, Jim?" she said. "You don't look yourself. Something has gone wrong with you. Nobody ought to look like anything secret from your old mother."

"Here I be as foolish as that, my boy," said the doctor earnestly. "If you have anything on your mind, tell it to me. There's nothing so far wrong but that it can be set right, I'll be bound."

Thus pressed, their son told them all that had happened since he had left his hotel from Von Hammer at the Dock Gates, and the subsequent visit to the Eccleston agency. "I am hardly realizing it all yet," said the young doctor, "for I heard scarce to be in a waltz, and I can't reason about it."

"You did right, Jim," said Mrs. Lemmidge, with a shiver at the thought of what might have befallen her boy. "Leave the young man to his scheming old father."

"You say why what you like of me," she said bitterly. "I suppose that is one of your privileges as a guardian. I do have no right, however, to speak evil of my friends.

"You are becoming impertinent," he answered, and resumed his occupation in his arm chair. Kate curled back into her corner again, while the rain thrashed and swirled and sobbed outside through the darkness. Looking through the steamy window pane she saw the lamps shine out twinkle here and there of the lights of the scattered country cottages, and dimmedly a red signal lamp would glare down upon her like the bloodshot eye of some prodigious flight from London. Her guardian had not expected her from the Dimbles to-night, so late was she delayed by this. Could it be that he intended some exercise of pressure and terrorism by which she should be forced to accept Eric, as a husband? She clenched her little white teeth as the thought of it, and the world would have to be a very, very much worse place even than it is upon that point. "That was only one bright spot in her outlook. When she reached her destination she would at once write to Mr. Hinsdale, tell her where she was, and ask her frankly for an explanation of the strange silence. How much wiser it would have been, she felt, if she had not left Dimbles, but had withheld her from it.

The train had stopped at one little large junction. Looking out through the window she saw by the flickering lamps the sign, "Eccleston." Another minute, and the interval of clattering and rumbling and jingling brought the train to the same station in a second stations of importance. Prince Rupert, Cromwell, Charles, and the Hindlestone remarked, shutting up his book.

This proved to be a small squat, stocky, immovable man, with a face that bore no information as to its mind. There were the ordinary features, and there was the stiff hair, which refused to lie down, leaving those with the curious impression that it was a thick wig of some unknown material. It was a dark face, and the eyes were very dark, with little wrinkles at the corners, which gave them a look of perpetual humorous surprise. The man was clean shaven, and his mouth was of a peculiar shape, with a little curve upward at the corners, which, when the man was at ease, gave him a look of quiet, dry humor. He was dressed in a dark lounge suit, and had a pair of thick gloves in his hand. He looked at the girl for a moment with a quiet, dry, inquisitive look, and then, as she rose, he stepped forward and spoke to her.

"Miss Kate Lemmidge, I believe?" he said. "I am Mr. Hinsdale's clerk, Mr. Jackson, and I have a fly outside for you."

"Thank you very much," said the girl, with a sigh of relief. "I was quite afraid that you would not be here."

"Mr. Hinsdale's orders were that I should be at the station to-night," said the man, in a dry, quiet voice, as he led the way to the door. "Mr. Hinsdale's orders are always to be obeyed."

"Is he well?" she asked, as she followed him through the crowd of passengers to the door.

"Quite well, thank you, miss," he answered, as he helped her into the fly. "He sent me to say that he hopes you will be very careful not to catch cold."

"Tell him I am quite well, and very much obliged to him for his thoughtfulness," she said, as the fly rattled and jolted over the cobbles of the station yard.

"I will do so, miss," he said, as he closed the door and climbed into his seat beside the driver. "Shall I tell him anything else?"

"Tell him I shall write to him to-morrow," she said, with a little hesitation in her voice.

GRANITE TRADE FIRES UP.

More than 5,000 Men Idle as Result of Differences Over Wages.

More than 5,000 cutters, quarry men and others employed in the granite quarries at Barre and Montpelier, Vt., and Westerly, R. I., are affected by a strike on account of a wage difference between the unions and manufacturers to move at the rate of 44 cents an hour instead of the existing agreement to replace that which governed the industry on the Saturday, although the Vermont and Rhode Island unions were in unusual agreement that their demands may not by the manufacturers, the cutters at Hallowell refused for work, following a vote to submit the matter in dispute to arbitration. The situation of the present controversy, for an average wage of 47½ cents an hour, is decided by the Vermont unions, while the manufacturers say they will continue for the shorter period than three years. The unions at Westerly ask for a minimum increase of 44 cents an hour, and that a decided difference between the unions in Rhode Island and Vermont, the manufacturers in Westerly also strike for an increase in wages.

PHONES SUPPLANT KEY MEN.

Lake Shore Superintendent Reports New System Is Satisfactory.

Telephone service is rapidly supplanting telegraphy in the operation of train, as a result of the new telephone line by railroad telegraphers according to a report, assistant general superintendent of the Lake Shore road to an interview in Cleveland. Twelve of 24 Mr. Smith, "that the use has regulating work, long hours, will long last. Our experience with what it would have taken ten years. Practically in the direction of use of the telephone on railroads. Since the order was issued, we have found that railroads in many parts of the country have joined themselves."

STUDEBAKER PA GOES TO JAIL.

Refuses to Pay Fine for Keeping Son Out of School.

Rather than pay the fine imposed upon him for violating the compulsory school attendance law by not sending his child to school, Christian Hartzler of Pinnacle, Pa., is going to the Hooks county jail for serve two days. When arrested he declared he would never pay the fine imposed by the justice that he would have to go to jail if he did not pay. Hartzler exclaimed: "All right, I'll go to jail, but you'll never get the money. I've got a boy, and when I get out I'll move out of the State." The school directors also propose to prosecute Hartzler in order to get the State appropriation.

Barney's Widow Gives Up All.

Ready to surrender every dollar she owns to pay her husband's debts, Mrs. Lilly W. Barney of New York, widow of Charles T. Barney, has turned over more than $9,000,000 in real and personal property to the Barney Estate Company, which in return has agreed to meet every obligation of the former president of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, who committed suicide last November.

NO STRIKERS THERE.

Capital and Labor at Peace in Philadelphia for Twenty Years.

An almost Utopian condition of cooperation has been reached in the shoe industry of Philadelphia, and strikes and lockouts are an unknown. Since Nov. 12, 1897, every labor trouble between the manufacturers and their employes has been satisfactorily adjusted by a mixed board of arbitration of seven men chosen by the factory owners and seven men elected by the workmen. Although 93 per cent of the decisions of the board have been in favor of the workmen not one has been presented by the employers. Neither have the workmen complained against the decisions adverse to them, and they have in every instance abided by them. Hundreds have remained steadily at work.

Other manufacturers of the city have watched with close interest the operation of the arrangement between the Shoe Manufacturers' Association and its employes. As a result of the last meeting of the association there are three trouble-down Camden firms and twelve in Philadelphia have joined hands. Joined the association. It now embraces all but one of the leading firms in the manufacture of shoes in that city and Camden, and employs more than 10,000 men.

The work goes on under the beneficent operation of the association's agreement with its employes.

It was after a long and bitter struggle with the Knights of Labor in 1897 that the manufacturers decided to devise some scheme whereby the strikes, that were occurring almost weekly, might be stopped, and they instituted their conference plan. Since then, as the result, they have gone on, and the workmen quietly and as a result remain today without it having been necessary to alter one syllable.

CHINA TO BE THE GREATEST.

Oriental Editor Says the Flowery Kingdom Has a Future.

How China is to be the editor of the Chinese World, in an address at San Francisco, said:

"My country is raising an army of 1,000,000 men to drive Europeans from the empire. China is just awakening from her slumber and she is getting ready to go to sleep. When she does so, she will need 1,000,000 men. The Japanese, Russian, and other robbing and thieving nations been on a hurry. If I live ever tries again to grab any Chinese territory we will fill her full of very hot lead. Just watch. Japan did what is described to be the greatest nation in earth. Japan stands best with its revenue she has been honest and has always lived up to her pledges. She is the only nation who has dealt with us honestly and Chinamen can never forget her disinterested friendship.

GEORGE M. SHIPPY

CHICAGO'S CHIEF OF POLICE IS ATTACKED.

Shippy Receives Knife Stab and Son Is Shot, but He Slays His Assailant.

FIGHT IN HOME OF THE VICTIMS.

Desperate Assassin Approaches Official on Pretext of Presenting Letter and Attempts Murder.

Chicago's chief of police, George M. Shippy, was stabbed in the right side, the 1st, Harry, 19 years old was probably fatally shot in the left lung, and his brother, James Foley, was wounded in the right wrist in a desperate struggle in which he attempted to kill the head of the police department in the front hallway of his home, early Monday. The assassin was himself killed by the chief, who fired a bullet into his right temple. The assassin is declared to have been an anarchist and may have been the leader of a gang aimed at others besides the chief. Mrs. Shippy and the chief's daughter, Georgia, 22 years old, were eyewitnesses of the tragedy.

The supposed anarchist called at the chief's residence an hour before the shooting and was denied admittance by a domestic. He then called at the chief's home Sunday morning, but Shippy was not home.

Chief Shippy had called for his luggage and his driver, Foley, was at rest in the city. When the man who looked like a solicitor or a Jew, rang the doorbell. The chief himself answered the summons and confronted the man. The stranger threw an envelope into Shippy's hand and said:

"Here is a note. I bring you."

The chief, whose suspicions had been aroused by the appearance of the man's hands, and calling to his wife told her to notify Lieut. Wm. Shippy and to guard the man wrapped away, but her hand closed over a revolver in his over coat pocket.

"Why, got out?" she screamed. "Look out, George, for your life!"

Shippy, who had drawn his revolver, pointed it at the man, who looked at Mrs. Shippy, smile and drew his weapon. He raised it to fire at her in his rush, and the chief shot him in the arm as the woman dodged behind some furniture. Foley had heard the shots and came running up the steps, as did Georgia, the daughter, who had just left the home. The two jumped into the group of struggling fighters while Mrs. Shippy ran out of the house to rallying employers and employed as well as the police.

The workingmen of Washington, D. C., are said to be planning several events which will be of benefit and interest to the organized labor. One of the plans contemplates the erection in the near future of a magnificent temple of labor. Another, the holding of a house for the aged and infirm.

In 1901 the Pipemakers' International had a membership of 35,000 and about 40 unions. At the adjournment of the convention the general fund of the organization showed a debit, and this was the case for two successive years. The membership now numbers 1,000 unions. There is also in the bank to the credit of the union $100,000.

The labor officials of Massachusetts say that, with the report of the legislative committee of the Legislature, all sections of the state are now in better shape to fire the powers of the courts in injunction cases, which from industrial disputes, some favorable legislation is secured.

The northern Pacific Railroad company is sending out an important circular to the affiliated trade unions. The circular invites the unions to send delegates to London, Ohio, and on the 19th of February to discuss new standards and forms for a labor daily newspaper.

The International of Labor at Washington, D. C., has been in existence for twenty-five years, among that time over 25,000 strikes have occurred in the United States from 1881 to 1905 involving a total of 32,235 labor disturbances, involving 2,000,000 men, of which 1,000,000 strikers and 710,271 employers locked out, causing a loss of $2,848,376 wage earners strikers.

Blast furnaces in the north of England have had to submit to a reduction of wages, the result of a general review of the conditions found. The iron trade has declined in a serious manner of late and a lessening output.

FACTS ABOUT : : : : : : THE CENSUS.

The thirteenth census of the United States will be taken on April 15, 1910. Heretofore it has been taken on June 1, but the change has been made at the suggestion of Director Nash, who believes that the earlier date will place much more accurate results. The most people, especially in the large cities, go to the sea shore or mountains early in June. In the country districts are greatly handicapped in their efforts to obtain the desired information.

For the first time in the history of the country the work will be kept of a permanent bureau which goes established five years ago, the authorities claiming that it would save time and money. Heretofore it has been found that the results will supply justify these claims, because of the shifting organization this accumulated will have all the preliminary arrangements completed before the big rush begins.

It is estimated that the census will cost the government about $15,000,000, and employ an army of nearly 75,000 people, including the enumerators, 3,500 clerks and 40,000 enumerators. The total cost will be approximately $15,000,000.

The thirteenth census will be enriched to inquiries relating to population, agriculture, manufactures, mines and quarries. It is provided in the law that the census shall be taken of agriculture in 1910, and once every ten years thereafter, which shall include a census of the farms, ranges, and the number and value of domestic animals, poultry and bees on farms throughout the country.

It is proposed that in 1911 a census is to cover 3,000,000 shall be expended in 1911 and 1912 in the work of preparing forms for taking complete statistics of the manufacturing establishments and the acreage of the principal crops, the returns on which the enumerators are based in 1910 for the new county in lieu of 50 per cent of the acreage of the farms in each county.

The constitution of the United States requires an enumeration of the people every ten years as a basis for the apportionment of representatives in Congress. The new Supreme Court, which outlines a comprehensive plan for a census, must feature of national development, is the organization of the permanent census bureau with six simple questions relating to population, "to assess and collect the data necessary and convenient in the form and manner herein prescribed."

BOMBS FOR THE SHAH, THREE MEN ARE SLAIN.

Ruler of Persia Outwits Assassins by Riding at the End of Procession.

HIS AUTO MADE A TARGET.

Outsiders Dead and Chauffeur and Many Others Wounded—Troops Escort Monarch to Palace.

An attempt was made Friday afternoon to assassinate the Shah of Persia with a bomb. His majesty was not hurt. Three of the outsiders who were accompanying him were killed.

The Shah escaped from the assassins by the skin of his teeth. The bomb was thrown at the Shah's automobile. Its shrieks, in exploding, killed the three outsiders, wounded the chauffeur and a score of bystanders and shattered the vehicle.

The Shah, however, was not in his automobile. He had taken the precaution to send the motor car ahead and to ride in a carriage further back in the procession. The motor car was a closed one, and it was thought that the occupant was inside.

As soon as the Shah heard the explosion he alighted hurriedly from his carriage and entered a neighboring house. Here he remained while his attendants sent word for a detachment of troops. The soldiers were rushed to the scene and formed in front of the house in which was the Shah. He then came out and, accompanied by a bodyguard, returned to the palace.

The house from which the bombs were thrown and the adjacent houses were searched by the police, but no arrests were made.

UNREST IN INDIA.

Great Britain Preparing for Sinister Emergency in That Country.

It is by consulted many people that gloomy counsels burn fire at crisis within the empire. Such a warning is given by the Calcutta correspondent of the Bombay Gazette, the leading English paper in India. The correspondent says: "Unless the British war office is the officers of military forces throughout India, they state that mobilization may be made immediately possible and the forces concentrated to be prepared to join forces on receipt of telegraphic orders.

They must keep the adjuntants informed of their movements and get ready to take the field at a moment's notice. For this extraordinary action to be the fact the government is pleased to the growing unrest in India. The war office compiled a scheme of throwing the forces of India into that contingency, mobilization, if necessary, the entire force, and the Indian troops will then be used as garrison duty, to all parts of the empire whence the regulars have been withdrawn.

The danger of an uprising in India, prompted by the Transvaal's treatment of Indian residents, has grown rapidly, as was terrible, and the government is compelled to prepare for any emergency. A similar turn has been given to the situation by certain occurrences. It has been blinded the fear fears that the actions of the Boer majority in the Transvaal was actuated by a desire to embroil the home government with India. This interpretation of Boer motives in return for British aid in putting home government in the hands of the Boers is widely accepted, even by the government officials.

NEWS OF MINOR NOTE.

Nine people were killed by an explosion of gas in the mine of the Mondy Coal company at Hazleton, Pa.

Bishop Berry of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, died at Nashville, Tenn., with a pringe and a complication of other maladies.

Mrs. Frieda Dieper Mills of West Chillicothe, Ohio, were burned to her in a fire in her home. Her husband escaped from a "one hot" on a gate of the Chillicothe, Ohio, penitentiary, a few days ago.

New York "suffragettes," 6,000 strong, marched through the streets. There were no disorders, but the police had to use some batons with the mob, which followed the marchers.

The socialists of Stettin, Prussia, are needed round the city hall and showed the imperial authorities. The lines were drawn and the crowds, scattered them and arrested a few of the disturbers.

Henry Arthur McArdle, who gained fame as the "Lion" of the Lambs' Club, and Jim Jackson, and other famous knockout blows, died at his home in Jersey City, N. J., after an illness of only a few days.

TO PLEAD FOR PAPOOSE.

Indians Will Ask White Father for Land for Recent Arrivals.

Washington is soon to be visited by one of the most imposing and picturesque institutions in existence. It will be composed entirely of chiefs of the Indian tribes, and it will be the first time that such a gathering has been made in the history of the country. The idea is said to have been conceived by Commissioner Leupp, who is anxious to secure the assistance of the chiefs in the work of the allotment of land to the Indians. The proposition will be to ask the chiefs to go back to their tribes and explain to the Indians the necessity for the allotment of land to the Indians

ROAD TAX

Earl Comes to the Defense of the Pat Cash Road Tax.

Some newspapers have told the people through their columns that New Earl's bad pet cash road tax law fastened onto the people "the man who lives on the by-road will not get a dollar's worth of repairs, for the township highway commissioner will expend it all on the main automobile roads"

The truth of the matter is that never in the history of Michigan did the by road taxpayer have such protection as he has under the cash road tax law, for it says in the law

"The road repair fund must be expended on the roads directly benefiting the property taxed" It further says that if ten taxpayers think the commissioner is not doing this, it is their right to protest to the township board, and the board must look into the matter and decide which is right, and order has the work shall be done

The bill is a home rule bill, giving the townships the right to say how much they will raise in both the road repair and highway improvement funds although it limits the amount of each fund to one-half of one per cent.

The township board has the right to borrow three-fourths of the fund voted, so the highway commissioner can pay cash for work done; one-fourth may be reserved for emergency repairs and taking care of snow in the winter time.

The highway commissioner can hire men in different sections of the township to look after snow in winter and pay them for their work.

It would be a wonder if a man could draw a perfect bill the first time, and Commissioner Earle does not expect that he did, so he asks the citizens of the state to stand by the township commissioners and help them along, and when defects appear to write to the state highway department and tell where the law can be improved, and why; but to write in a spirit of interest in the state of Michigan, and not in a spirit of having a general kick coming.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Two hundred Petoskey citizens interpreted Thursday night at the Coliseum in the interest of a "Greater Petoskey." The plan was broached to organize a company to purchase a block of the David Ward timber lands in Antrim county, the lumber to be manufactured there.

Mancelona has a merry scrap on at the village election. The president of the village, who has been renominated, has refused to allow the saloons go open when a fire has occurred in town after closing time and is also determined that they shall obey the Sunday closing law. A candidate has been named to oppose him, and the fight is in between those who favor the the observance of the law and the advocates of the "open town" policy.

Traverse City Record: The subscription committee having in charge the matter of raising funds for the proposed street railway and interurban lines have been diligently at work canvassing a thorough canvass among the business men. A great many have been seen and many have not yet subscribed but promises of liberal subscriptions have been made. Up to last night the total subscription was $42,500, the following being the subscribers.

Jean Jordan Herald: Mr. Aurish Hall Colburn one of East Jordan's oldest and respected citizens died at the home his son Mr. Fred Colburn of Echo Township after a short illness. Deceased was born in Wedington, N. Y., July 2 1831. Coming in 1889 with his family to West Jordan where he has since resided. Mr. Colburn was widely known in this vicinity through his extensive lumbering operations which for many years was carried on in this city. Funeral services were held from the home of Fred Colburn in Echo township, Friday forenoon. Rev. A. D. Gidgby conducted the same.

Traverse City Record: Frank Bobin left this morning for East Jordan where he has bought the Jordan Packing Company's establishment. He will step into the business with the best outlook, as the prestige of the company has made them a big factor in that vicinity. Mr. Wilhelm is well adapted to conduct such a business as he has had eighteen years' experience in meat cutting and preparation at the Northern Michigan Asylum. He was obliged to leave the position at the institution last fall on account of ill health. His many friends in the city will be nothing but success in his new undertaking.

At Traverse City last week, in court, Judge Mayne made a statement regarding the enforcement of the liquor law, warning all organizations from violation of this law, and stated that the officers of Grand Traverse county would act under instruction from the court; and would arrest violators of the liquor law among the organizations as they would individuals. Judge Mayne is very determined upon this point and without the people in Traverse City will be enforced as to all kinds of assemblages dealing with distilled liquors. This is not in regard to the past but for the future, he stated. "Public sentiment has given license to this to a certain extent, but hereafter it must stop."

Boyne City has an efficient truant officer with "Man Keyes the a Rough," whose eternal vigilance deserves recognition, even though at times it is overworked and slightly indirected. He is a terror to the juvenile truants. Contest at Boyne, which always keeps one eye skinned for the Kindergarten cop. The other day the pestiferous a truant of sixteen playing marbles in an alley and started for them and he scattered. One Dick fellow fell by the wayside and dropped into the angry clutches of the law. Before listing the youngster into court the officer asked the little fellow what why he wasn't at school. The answer was rather unsettling to the copper: "Cause it's Saturday."

The Michigan Trust company has taken over the $300,000 first mortgage 6 per cent timber reserve gold bonds of the W. H. White company of Boyne City and will offer them to investors at par and interest. The bonds are in $1,000 denominations, redeemable at any time on 60 days' notice at 103 and interest and mature in $50,000 installments at intervals of six months, the last installment payable in February, 1917. The bonds are a first and only lien on 55,720 acres of hardwood timber land estimated to cut 576,000,000 feet of lumber and which has a present market value of $2,500,000. The lands are in Charlevoix, Antrim, Montmorency, Otsego and Alpena counties. The company also holds a controlling interest in the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena railroad, and this interest is included in the security offered. The mortgage provides that 38,000 acres of the land containing 252,000,000 feet shall be held as a reserve not to be cut during the life of the mortgage.

—Friday evening, at Charlevoix Theater, "Rebecca's Triumph." See "Crazy Mags" recovery of her long lost child.

—Olaf Nordtvim, the Booth Co. manager, and two of his office force, were here Saturday house hunting. Mr. Nordtvim has leased the McKinnon house on Park avenue.

—Powers Brothers, the plumbers, have leased the basement of the Charlevoix Theater building, and will remove their plumbing business thereto, to which will be added an up-to-date tin shop.

—At the regular convocation of Charlevoix chapter No. 141, Royal Arch Masons last Monday night, a beautiful Past High Priest's apron was presented Mrs. A. Butters, in recognition of his valuable services as high priest last year.

—The Charlevoix Sentinel rises up and remarks, quite seriously, that there is not a town within forty miles of Charlevoix and has a lighting plant that is not in trouble concerning the management and operation thereof. This is easily explained by cause. Probably and those other towns to regret being within forty miles of Charlevoix.

—Abner C. Hawkes, of Royce, who has been a student of the I. C. S. of Scranton, has finished his course in Marine engineering and received his diploma. Has also taken his first examination at the office of local inspectors at Grand Haven and received his license as assistant engineer on one thousand gross tons, and one hundred tons in "charge; condensing steamer."

Rev. Ernest Willoughby Jewell, who was ordained in 1893 as Episcopal clergyman, and who has held charges in Manistee, Calumet and Petoskey, lately received subdeacon orders in the Roman Catholic church at Grand Rapids and next week will be consecrated a priest. He was married in 1892 and has three children studying in different religious academies. His wife died 10 years ago.

—Last Wednesday afternoon about fifteen of Mrs. Howard's lady friends from the different parts of the town surprised her, some coming by sleigh, and others on foot, to spend the afternoon and enjoy a delicious supper which, at half past five began to emerge from the baskets brought by the happy guests.—Cold meat, baked beans, sandwiches, salads, cake, cream puffs, cookies, doughnuts, delicious coffee, and last of all confection were relished by all. A most pleasant afternoon, and one long to be remembered.

—The Womans Missionary Society of the Congregational church will meet with Mrs. John Nicholls Friday March 20th, at 2:30. Hepworth to call with your favorite passage of scripture. After the business session, the following program will be rendered with Mrs. A. M. Burdick and Mrs. Hubbard as leaders. Topic, Our Emigrants. Vocal Duett, Helen and Dorothy Armstrong. The present Problem, Mrs. N. E. Heaton; Where The Work Begins, Miss M. E. Clark; How to Surround the young with Christian Influence, Mrs. F. N. Chapel; Why Despise the Imigrant, Mrs. H. A. Putnam.

—Brothers E. L. Jones, editor of the St. Ignace Enterprise, Mr. Hamsey, Chicago Sun Tribune, E. L. Sprague, of the Traverse City Daily Eagle, Will Hamson, of the Traverse City Evening Record, Willard A. Smith, of the Charlevoix Sentinel, James, Collins, of the Alpena Argus and J. C. McLaren, of the Bay City Tribune, have rendered the editor of this publication much valuable service in the past few weeks in furnishing necessary information and in showing a spirit of fairness to the Republican cause that we are sure the Republican will fully appreciate, not only in their own communities but all about the lakes. In fact all the newspaper men that we have occasion to meet or with whom we have come in contact are interested in the cause of Michigan's great industries and will do all they can in a public spirited way that will be for the best interest of the industries themselves and for the perpetuation of the business.—The Great Lakes Mahoriman.

—S. M. See & Sons have a new ad. this week.

—H. J. McMillan was elected president of East Jordan at the village election last week.

—See Kitty and her Patsy, in "Rebecca's Triumph" at Charlevoix Theater Friday evening of this week.

—Some of the officials of the Sugar Co. have recently organized a new company under the title of the Charlevoix County Land Co. The purpose of this company is to buy and sell farm lands. To bring about a market for the thousands of unimproved lands and the many neglected farms they have been doing considerable advertising in certain localities with the astonishing result of having received a large number of answers or inquiries within one week. It seems that now is an opportune time to bring in new settlers and any who have stump lands or improved farms to sell will do well to consult with Mr. Hubbard or Mr. Shapton of the Sugar Co.

A Jolly House Warming.

The fine new home of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Hubbard, on Park Avenue, was the scene, Tuesday night, of one of the most enjoyable social events in the history of Charlevoix.

It was an old fashioned "house-warming," given by Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard to their neighbors and friends, and the house was full. The upper hall was turned over to the smokers, and clay pipes and cigars drove the ladies back down stairs as fast as they came up after their neglectful husbands. Mr. Hubbard got thoroughly corralled everybody in the parlors and lower hall, and then announced a "walkaway."

Rev. Dr. Wright, R. Lee Iddings, Capt. Pete Campbell, and others, gave interesting talks, but the most enjoyable treat was the musical program that was interspersed. Mrs. B. C. Hubbard, of St. Louis, Mich., sang several high class solos. Mrs. Hubbard is possessed of a soprano voice of rare quality and timbre and of careful culture. Her songs were the event of the evening. She was accompanied by that accomplished lady, Mrs. Davidson, who also played a violin obligato with Mrs. Hubbard, and sang a haughty chosen soprano selection. Miss Frederica Hubbard contributed to the excellent program with pleasing songs.

An elaborate luncheon was served later, and it was nearly "one twelve" when the gathering broke up, after having, with one accord, expressed the hope that nothing but happiness shall reign in the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Hubbard.

Last night (Wednesday) Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard entertained the young folks, and an equally happy evening was spent.

One Way of Figuring on Next Fall's Battle.

There is something tangible in the senate situation to work on in attempting to measure the political forces of the country, because of the election of Bradley from Kentucky and the probability that Colorado will elect her next senator from the ranks of the dominant party, the United States senate a year from now will be composed of sixty-three Republicans and twenty-nine Democrats.

This is made the more probable because the Republicans are stronger in the west than in 1907, and because no eastern state choosing a senator next winter is doubtful in a presidential year.

This means a two thirds Republican majority in the senate, a thing unknown since Grant's first term. Under such control the minority cannot prevent the ratification of a treaty or seriously obstruct, much less control, legislation.

As late as says the Democrats had a majority in the senate, and since that time have lost heavily but their seats because the west overcame the fatal fever of free silver and returned to its former past allegiance.

These facts afford a line on the presidential election. Old states have been reclassified and new ones added because of an administration policy making for justice, equality, publicity and freedom from oppressive monopoly. With a man like Taft, in whom the people have confidence as one delicious and able to carry on this same policy, the probabilities all favor one outcome next fall.—Free Press.

The Board of Public Works Again.

The anti-board of public works spasm that disturbed our corporate system last week has, to a large degree, subsided. Only echo echoes is now discernable.

It should require no argument to convince any intelligent citizen of the utter folly of abolishing the board of public works. It is difficult to argue the question because not one valid reason has yet been given why it should be abolished.

There are always those who are ready to vote something out of existence, especially if that something has rubbed their fur the wrong way, indeed, we are confident we could find those who would sign a petition to abolish the common council and the board of education.

The proposition involves the "initiative and referendum," in that the petition of one hundred free holders submits it to a popular vote, a two-thirds majority being necessary to carry it. It has been urged that no good citizen should object to the referendum, inasmuch as the source of all law is the people. In the abstract this is true; but there are times, especially in the evolution of municipal existence, when both the initiative and the referendum produce undesirable results, from the standpoint of effective and economical administration.

We reaffirm and emphasize what we said last week concerning this proposition. We assert that nothing has occurred in connection with the operation of our public utilities that in any degree justifies the movement, and we are firmly of the opinion that should the proposition carry and the board of public works be abolished, the people would restore it within two years.

It has been stated in the public press that the common council had voted itself salaries, and that the board of public works also had the power to draw pay for services. Just here is where some people may be interested to vote unintelligently. The law provides that members of the common council may receive compensation, but the board of public works is actually prohibited from receiving any compensation whatever. No member of the common council of the city of Charlevoix has ever received one cent of compensation for services, and will not. But we are of the opinion, and are not afraid to express it, that they are entitled to it, within reasonable limits.

In the interests of the city we hope the people will consider carefully before signing the petition, and that those who have already signed it will withdraw their names. We insist that it is a step backward which is not justified by any local condition, either present or prospective.

Circuit Court.

Judge Mayne called court at 10 o'clock Monday morning, with a good array of attorneys at the bar. The exit of the calendar occupied the most of the morning.

The first case called was that of The People vs. William Horton and Oliver Sullivan. These young men are charged with the murder of an Indian in Hayes last summer. All that afternoon and Tuesday forenoon was occupied in getting a jury, and as we go to to press the court is occupied with the case.

The Congressional Convention.

At the meeting of the congressional committee of the Eleventh district held at Reed City last week it was decided that the convention to elect delegates to the republican national convention will be held in that city, on Wednesday, April 15.

There will be two delegates elected from the Eleventh congressional district, the most prominent at this time being H. S. Holt of Traverse City, and Francis Kleg, of Isabelle county. The name of Judge Brown, of Big Rapids, has also been mentioned.

Petoskey Tocsin: A telegram was received this afternoon by W. S. Austin, of 58 Bridge street, from Beaver Island, announcing the death of their son, Chauncey Thomas Austin, which occurred Sunday, the 15th. Mr. Austin was employed by the Scott Joiner Lumber Company at the time of his death. He was born in Parish Village, N. Y., Oct. 23, 1874. The remains will be brought to Petoskey for interment, but not to uncertainty as to funeral arrangements, announcement will be made later.

Covell for Congress.

Two years ago the SENTINEL was placed in an embarrassing position with reference to the Congressional office. The office of this paper and Congressman Darragh had been for a number of years personal friends. As a member of Congress he had been industrious and effective in his work for this part of his district. The SENTINEL was pledged to his support early in the year preceding that campaign. The SENTINEL never yet broke a pledge.

Following this, Mr. Covell came into the field. All other things being equal, Mr. Covell had reason to expect the support of the SENTINEL. Its editor and Mr. Covell has been personal friends for twenty years. Mr. Covell was a Northern Michigan candidate. But the pledge came between duty and desire, and, in that canvas we did what we could, in our weak way, to advance the interests of Mr. Darragh.

Mr. Covell, both personally and through certain of his supporters, on more than one occasion, asked us for our support. It was refused, and the reason frankly stated. During that canvas not one word was published in the SENTINEL against Mr. Covell. But, on the contrary, it frequently spoke words of friendliness concerning him, and once used substantially these words:

"Mr. Covell's time will come, and it is bound to come soon. When that time comes Mr. Covell will have no more loyal or enthusiastic supporter than the editor of this paper."

Personally, in the sanctum of the SENTINEL, the editor addressed to Mr. Covell these words:

"I am pledged to Mr. Darragh, I shall keep that pledge. Your time is coming. When Mr. Darragh is out of the field I pledge you my word you will be my first choice."

About a month ago the SENTINEL, in commenting on the Congressional situation, stated that we could not place itself in the attitude of opposing a Northern Michigan candidate." Conservative as the fact is another—The SENTINEL was never on the fence on any question, neither can it be. In the above lazic paragraph we record a pledge.

We hasten to redeem that pledge, and from this on, until the close of the primaries, shall do all in our power to promote the interests of Gen. G. Covell in his new candidacy. We do not, we rejoice to the fact that we are not compelled to eat any of our words, previously uttered, concerning Gen.

What of Mr. Covell? We will lay aside the argument of local interest, that certainly applies with force here and consider the merits of Mr. Covell, to speak only of the fitness of the man for the position, and we think we can speak intelligently and impartially on that subject. Gen. G. Covell is one of the ablest lawyers and one of the brightest men in the eleventh Congressional district. He is now filling his second term as U. S. district attorney for the western district of Michigan. His record as such is one of conspicuous and creditably in every phase of his work in that important office. Living in the metropolis of the Grand Traverse region, he stands high in the esteem of his fellow townsmen, as well as in the estimation of the entire population of that and adjoining counties. He is a strong, forceful man, self possessed under all conditions, and grows stronger as he feels the pressure of opposition. There is no lift too high for him to climb, no chasm too broad for him to bridge.

No man has ever yet questioned his integrity who was courageous enough to back up his opinion. He is as true as needle to the pole. He is a worker, with both brain and heavy enough to do his work well, and he pays no bread bills for services when his work is finished. These opinions are based upon a long and intimate acquaintance with Mr. Covell.

We consider Gen. G. Covell head and shoulders above any candidate now before the electors of the eleventh congressional district. And these words are footed by words spoken in three, columns two years ago, when we were supporting another candidate, characterizing Mr. Covell as an able and honorable man, and sound republican.

Two years ago Mr. Covell carried Charlevoix county in the primaries by a handsome majority, running ahead of the ticket. We believe it is for the best interests of Charlevoix county that he should succeed Mr. Darragh in Congress, and we are confident that the Republican majority in this district will be very much larger than that of 1906.

Overloading the Stomach
IS responsible for many cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, heartburn, etc.
For the cure of these troublesome ailments you can't get medicine too good. Good medicines are more necessary than good food. ROAD TAX

Earl Comes to the Defense of His Pet Cash Road Tax.

Some newspapers have told the people through their columns that now East has the cash road tax law fastened onto the people "the man who lives on the by-road will not get a dollar's worth of repairs, for the township highway commissioner will expect it all on the main automobile roads."

The truth of the matter is that never in the history of Michigan did the by-road taxpayer have such protection as he has under the cash road tax law, for it says in the law "The road repair fund must be expended on the roads directly benefiting the property taxed." It further says that if ten taxpayers think the commissioner is not doing this, it is their right to protest to the township board, and the board must look into the matter and decide which is right, and order the work shall be done.

The bill is a home rule bill, giving the townships the right to say how much they will raise in both the road repair and highway improvement funds, although it limits the amount of each fund to one-half of one per cent.

The township board has the right to borrow three-fourths of the fund voted, so the highway commissioner can pay cash for work done; one-fourth may be reserved for emergency repairs and taking care of snow in the winter time.

The highway commissioner can hire men in different sections of the township to look after snow in winter and pay them for their work.

It would be a wonder if a man could draw a perfect bill the first time, and Commissioner Earle does not expect that he did, so he asks the citizens of the state to stand by the township commissioners and help them along, and when defects appear to write to the state highway department and tell where the law can be improved, and why; but to write in a spirit of interest in the state of Michigan, and not in a spirit of having a general kick coming.

Good For Everybody.

Mr. Norman R. Coulter, a prominent architect, in the Delbert Building, San Francisco says: "I fully endorse all that has been said of Electric Bitters as a tonic medicine. It is good for everybody. It corrects stomach, liver and kidny disorders in a prompt and efficient manner and builds up the system." Electric Bitters is the best spring medicine ever sold over a druggist's counter; as a blood purifier it is unequaled. 50c. at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Two hundred Petoskey citizens banqueted Thursday night at the Cushman in the interest of a "Greater Petoskey." The plan was broached to organize a company to purchase a block of the David Ward timber land in Antrim county, the lumber to be manufactured there.

Mancelona has a merry scrap on at the village election. The president of the village, who has been renominated, has refused to allow the saloons go open when a fire has occurred in town after closing time and is also determined that they shall obey the Sunday closing law. A candidate has been named to oppose him, and the fight is between those who favor the the observance of the law and the advocates of the "open town" policy.

Traverse City Record: The subscription committee having in charge the matter of raising funds for the proposed street railway and interurban lines have been diligently at work making a thorough canvass among the business men. A great many have been seen and many have not yet subscribed but promises of liberal subscriptions have been made. Up to last night the total subscription was $42,000, the following being the subscribers.

East Jordan Herald: Mr. Archah Hall Colburn one of East Jordan's oldest and respected citizens died at the home his son Mr. Fred Colburn of Echo Township after a short illness. Deceased was born in Wellington, N. Y. July 2 1831. Coming in 1860 with his family to Ionia Twsh. where he has since resided. Mr. Colburn was widely known in this vicinity through his extensive lumbering operations which for many years was carried on in this city. Funeral services were held from the home of Fred Colburn in Echo township, Friday forenoon. Rev. A. D. Grigsby conducted the some.

Traverse City Record: Frank Wilhelm left this morning for East Jordan where he has bought the Jordan Packing Company's establishment. He will step into the business with the best outlook, as the prestige of the company has made them a big factor in that vicinity. Mr. Wilhelm is well adapted to conduct such a business as he has had eighteen years experience in meat cutting and preparation at the Northern Michigan Asylum. He was obliged to leave the position at the institution last fall on account of ill health. His many friends in the city wish him nothing but success in his new undertaking.

At Traverse City last week, in court, Judge Mayne made a statement regarding the enforcement of the liquor law, warning all organizations from violation of the law, and stated that the officers of Grand Traverse county would act under instruction from the court; and would arrest violators of the liquor law among the organizations as they would individuals. Judge Mayne is very determined upon this point and wished the people to know that the law will be enforced as to all kinds of associations dealing with distilled liquors. This is not in regard to the past but for the future, he stated. "Public sentiment has given license to this to a certain extent, but hereafter it must stop."

Boyne City has an efficient truant officer with "his eye like a Eagle," whose external vigilance deserves recognition, even though at times it is overworked and slightly misdirected. He is a terror to the juvenile malcontent at Boyne, which always keep one eye skinned for the kindergarten cop. The other day the peeler saw a bunch of kiddies playing marbles in an alley and started for them and they scattered. One lad, a fellow fell by the wayside and dropped into the angry clutches of the law. Before hailing the youngster into court the officer asked the little fellow fellow why he wasn't at school. The answer was rather unsettling to the copper: "Cause it's Saturday."

The Michigan Trust company has taken over the $600,000 first mortgage 6 per cent timber reserve gold bonds of the W. H. White company of Boyne City and will offer them for investment at par and interest. The bonds are in $1,000 denomination, redeemable at 105 time on 60 days notice at 105 and interest and mature in $50,000 installments at intervals of six months, the last installment payable in February, 1917. The bonds are a first and only lien on 55,920 acres of hardwood timber land estimated to cut 300,000,000 feet of lumber and which has a present market value of $2,500,000. The lands are in Charlevoix, Antrim, Montmorency, Otsego and Alpena counties. The company also holds a controlling interest in the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena railroad, and this interest is included in the security offered. The mortgage prescribes that 35,000 acres of the land contain 232,000,000 feet of lumber shall be held as a reserve not to be cut during the life of the mortgage.

Bird believes the interest of a resident of this state can be taxed regardless of the port in which the vessel or vessel property is registered." It seems that now is an opportune time to bring in new settlers and any who have stump lands or improved farms to sell will do well to consult with Mr. Hubbard or Mr. Shapton of the Sugar Co.

A Jolly House Warming.

The fine new home of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Hubbard, on Park Avenue, was the scene, Tuesday night, of one of the most enjoyable social events in the history of Charlevoix.

It was an old fashioned "housewarming," given by Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard to their neighbors and friends, and the house was full. The upper hall was turned over to the smokers, and clay pipes and cigars drove the ladies back down stairs as fast as they came up after their neglectful husbands. Mr. Hubbard jointly corralled everybody in the parlors and lower hall, and then announced a "stalkspell."

Rev. Dr. Wright, Lee Iddings, Capt. Pete Campbell, and others, gave interesting talks, but the most enjoyable treat was the musical program that was interspersed. Mrs. H. C. Hubbard, of St. Louis, Mich., sang several high class solos. Mrs. Hubbard possesses a soprano voice of rare quality and timbre and of carefut culture. Her songs were the event of the evening. She was accompanied by that accomplished lady, Mrs. Davidson, who also played a violin obligato with Mrs. Hubbard, and was a happy choice. A superior selection. Miss Frederica Hubbard contributed to the excellent program with pleasing songs.

An elaborate luncheon was served later, and it was nearly "low twelve" when the gathering broke up, after having with one accord, expressed the hope that nothing but happiness shall reign in the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Hubbard.

Last night (Wednesday) Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard entertained the young folks, and an equally happy evening was spent.

One Way of Figuring on Next Falls's Battle.

There is something tangible in the senate situation to work on in attempting to measure the political forces of the country. Because of the action of Bradley from Kentucky and the probability that Colorado will select her next senator from the ranks of the dominant party, the United States Senate a year from now will be composed of sixty-three Republicans and twenty-nine Democrats.

This is made the more probable because the Republicans are stronger in the west than in 1902, and because no eastern state choosing a senator next winter is doubtful in a presidential year.

This means a two thirds Republican majority in the senate, a thing unknown since Grant's first term. Under such control the minority cannot prevent the ratification of a treaty or seriously obstruct, much less control, legislation.

As late as 1895 the Democrats had a majority in the senate, and since that time have lost nearly half their seats because the west overcame the sinful fever of free silver and returned to its former part allegiance.

These facts afford a line on the presidential election. Old states have been reclaimed and new ones added because of an administration policy making for justice, equality, publicity and freedom from unjustifiable monopoly. With a man like Taft, in whom the people have confidence as one solicitous and able to carry on this same policy, the probabilities all point one way, to come next fall.—Free Press.

The Board of Public Works Again.

The anti-board of public works spasm that disturbed our corporate system last week has, to a large degree, subsided. "My relies action is now observable.

It should require no argument to convince any intelligent citizen of the utter folly of abolishing the board of public works. It is difficult to argue the question because not one valid reason has yet been given why it should be abolished.

There are always those who are ready to vote something out of existence, especially if that something has robbed their for the wrong way. Indeed, we are confident we could find three who would sign a petition to abolish the common council and the board of education.

The proposition involves the "initiative and referendum," in that the petition of one hundred free holders submits it to a popular vote, a two-thirds majority being necessary to carry it. It has been urged that no good citizen should object to the referendum, inasmuch as the source of all law is the people. In this abstract this is true; but there are times, especially in the evolution of municipal existence, when both the initiative and the referendum produce undesirable results, from the standpoint of effective and economical administration.

We reaffirm and emphasize what we said last week concerning this proposition. We assert that nothing has occurred in connection with the operation of our public utilities that in any degree justifies the movement, and we are firmly of the opinion that should the proposition carry and the board of public works be abolished, the people would restore it within two years.

It has been stated in the public press that the common council had voted itself salaries, and that the board of public works also had the power to draw pay for services. Just here is where some people may be influenced to vote unintelligently. The law provides that members of the common council may receive compensation, but the board of public works is actually prohibited from receiving any compensation whatever. No member of the common council of the city of Charlevoix has ever received one cent of compensation for services, and will not. But we are of the opinion, and are not afraid to express it, that they are entitled to it, within reasonable limits.

In the interests of the city we hope the people will consider carefully before signing the petition, and that those who have already signed it will withdraw their names. We believe that it is a step backward which is not justified by any local condition, either present or prospective.

Circuit Court.

Judge Mayne called court at ten o'clock Monday morning, with a good array of attorneys in the bar. The call of the calendar occupied the most of the afternoon.

The first case called was that of The People vs. William Horton and Oliver Joslaw. These young men are charged with the murder of an Indian in Hayes last summer. All that afternoon and Tuesday forenoon was occupied in getting a jury, and as we go to press the court is occupied with the case.

The Congressional Convention.

At the meeting of the congressional committee of the Eleventh district held at Reed City last week it was decided that the convention to elect delegates to the republican national convention will be held in that city, on Wednesday, April 15.

There will be two delegates elected from the Eleventh congressional district, the most prominent at the time being H. S. Hall of Traverse City, and Francis King, of Isabelle county. The name of Judge Brown, of Big Rapids, has also been mentioned.

Petoskey News: A telegram was received this afternoon by W. S. Austin, of Big Rapids, stating that Beaver Island, announcing the death of their son, Chauncey Thomas Austin, which occurred Sunday, the 10th. Mr. Austin was employed by the Beaver Island Lumber Company, at the time of his death. He was born in Parish, Village N. Y., Oct. 22, 1871. The remains will be brought to Petoskey for interment, but owing to uncertainty as to funeral arrangements, announcement will be made later.

Covell for Congress.

Two years ago the SENTINEL was placed in an embarrassing position with reference to the Congressional canvass. The editor of this paper and Congressman Darragh had been for a number of years personal friends. As a member of Congress he had been industrious and effective in his work for this part of his district. The SENTINEL was pledged to his support early in the year preceding that canvass. The SENTINEL never yet broke a pledge.

Following this, Mr. Covell came into the field. All other things being equal, Mr. Covell had reason to expect the support of the SENTINEL. Its editor and Mr. Covell has been personal friends for twenty years. Mr. Covell was a Northern Michigan candidate. But the pledge came between duty and desire, and, in that canvass we did what we could, in our weak way, to advance the interests of Mr. Darragh.

Mr. Covell, both personally and through certain of his supporters, on more than one occasion, asked us for our support. It was refused, and the reason frankly stated. During that canvass not a word was published in the SENTINEL against Mr. Covell. But, on the contrary, it frequently spoke words of friendliness concerning him, and once used substantially these words:

"Mr. Covell's time will come, and it is hoped to some extent. When that time comes Mr. Covell will have no more loyal or enthusiastic supporter than the editor of this paper."

Personally, in the sanctum of the SENTINEL, the editor addressed to Mr. Covell these words:

"I am pledged to Mr. Darragh, I shall keep that pledge. Your time is coming. When Mr. Darragh is out of the field I pledge you my word you will be my first choice."

About a month ago the SENTINEL, in commenting on the Congressional situation, stated that "it could not place itself in the attitude of opposing a Northern Michigan candidate." Conclusive to this fact is another: The SENTINEL was never on the fence on any question, neither can it be. In the above italic paragraph we record a pledge.

We hasten to redeem that pledge, and from this on, until the close of the primaries, shall do all in our power to promote the interests of Geo. G. Covell in his candidature. And in doing so we rejoice in the fact that we can now emphasize in ease of our words, previously uttered, concerning him.

What of Mr. Covell? We will lay aside the argument of local interest, (that certainly applies with force here in the candidacy of Mr. Covell,) and speak only of the fitness of the man for the position, and we think we can speak intelligently and impartially on that subject. Geo. G. Covell is one of the ablest lawyers, and one of the brightest men in the eleventh Congressional district. He is now filling his second term as U. S. district attorney for the western district of Michigan. His records stands out conspicuously and creditably in every phase of his work in that important office. Living in the metropolis of the Grand Traverse region, he stands high in the estimation of the people of that section of the district and adjoining counties. He is a strong, forceful man, well possessed under all conditions, and grows stronger as he feels the pressure of opposition. There is will too high for him to climb, no chasm too broad for him to bridge.

No man has ever yet questioned his integrity, who was courageous enough to back up his opinion. He is as true as the needle to the pole. He is a worker, with both brain and heart enough to do his work well, and he pays no lines bond for services when the work is finished. These sentiments are based upon long and intimate acquaintance with Mr. Covell.

We consider Geo. G. Covell head and shoulders above any candidate now before the electorate of the eleventh congressional district. And these words are fortified by words spoken in these columns two years ago, when we were supporting another candidate, characterizing Mr. Covell as an able and honorable man, and a sound republican."

Two years ago Mr. Covell carried Charlevoix county in the primaries by a handsome majority, running about 40 ahead of the ticket. We believe it is for the best interests of Charlevoix county that he should succeed Mr. Darragh in Congress, and we are confident that the majority of 1908 will be larger than that of 1906.

WALLS FALL AT FIRE.

Firemen Caught in Crash of Debris Fighting Flames in Chicago.

More than a score of firemen were injured, three perhaps fatally, in a fire which destroyed Apollo Hall, 225 to 232 Blue Island avenue, Chicago, shortly before 5 o'clock Monday morning. Nearly an hour and half marched out safe from injury or death under falling walls. The building was in the heart of the district and there was considerable alarm among the occupants of rooms above the hall, in which the fire spread. The damage is estimated at $80,000. The hall was on the second floor and was used for dancing and lodge meetings. The third floor was used for theatrical entertainments. Captain Ryan and his men were on the third floor when the roof caught fire and crashed into the street. The men were carried down with the debris and were rescued from probable death by heroic firemen. Members of engine company No. 18 had a narrow escape. From an adjoining building to which the firemen had retreated, firemen rescued Hugo Oehlen, a tailor, his wife, and one children. J. Sparrman, an elevator man who had lost his way in the smoke, was extricated by the firemen. Four members of hose company No. 3 were injured. Lieutenant J. B. Rosenmayer and his family of five were taken from the rear of the building but been learned. It was reported in the neighborhood that an invalid lady had been unable to accompany the remainder of the hall for a meeting, while a few have been held there Sunday. The women are relieved, it is said, to read the phrase.

RACE TO FINISH WARSHIPS.

Contest Between Government and Contractor Recalled by Contest.

A race in naval construction now in progress seems likely to prove even more interesting than the famous one between the government and the private shipbuilder yard at Newport News. The race is the struggle of the Lawrenceville Shipbuilding and Construction Company, which was wrecked by a storm last year, to finish the two battleships Delaware and North Dakota. The first of the 20,000-ton Dreadnoughts of the American navy, the other two, that figure in the historic contest. The Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company is building the Delaware, while the New River Shipbuilding Company at Quincy, Mass., has the contract for the North Dakota. At the present time the New River company is leading by a big margin, the percentage of completion of the North Dakota is 58 per cent, according to report being 5.91 per cent more than that of the Delaware. The race, however, is still going.

STEVENS SEES CANAL FAILURE.

Former Chief Engineer of Panama Work Says It Cannot Pay.

John F. Stevens, a vice president of the New York New Haven and Hartford Railroad and a former chief engineer of the Panama Canal, has issued a statement regarding the inter-oceanic canal will not help the United States in its trade with South America and especially all the inhabitants of the southern continent on the west coast of the Andes. Mr. Stevens also says that commercial relations with the islands of the Pacific and the far East will be little benefited. Mr. Stevens concludes that the canal will not cost more than expected. The date of finishing it he fixes as January, 1915.

EACH RECRUIT ONE HOUSEWIFE.

This Will Be Part of the Toilet Outfit of the Young Soldiers.

The recent order which supplies to an army recruit upon his enlistment a full kit of toilet articles has run the gamut of political controversy and has been adopted. As a result, that is to say, the United men get in addition to the regular outfit: Brushes for hair, teeth, clothes and shoes; comb, pocket knife and tin cup; two towels, toilet soap, whisk-broom, and but, but not least, "housewife." The housewife is explained to be a neat little case containing thread, needle, buttons and others.

Wants State Officers Investigated.

Governor Harris of Ohio has sent to the General Assembly a special message urging that appropriations be made for the investigation of the books of the office of the Auditor of State and of all the other State officers. The message was prompted by a request from Auditor Hubbert for an investigation in view of charges circulated throughout the State.

WHEN CHINA'S EMPRESS DIES.

Then, It Is Said, Japan May Fight the United States.

So long as Tuan Ju, the dowager empress of China lives, the Japanese question will not become acute. That is the consensus of opinion in the Philippines today, a Manila correspondent asserts. When the dowager empress dies Japan undoubtedly will try to grab Manchuria, and as a result of the conflagration the Philippines may become involved. In Manila it is not expected that the Japanese question will assume a serious phase at all soon.

With Frame fleet in the Pacific, Uncle Sam will have sixteen first-class battleships and eight cruisers available against Japan's entire navy of thirteen battleships and five cruisers. No one believes Japan will overcome hostilities. In the event of war, though, Japan could take the Philippines. She is only seven days sail from Manila, and no navy in the world would be able to patrol the 3000 miles of island coast line. Japan has facilities for landing troops from the Philippines in a week. There are 11,000 United States troops in the islands, including the constabulary.

A large force in the Philippines is a strong against the success of Japan. Her statesmen know that there is a feeling of hate for Japanese but an intense temperament after America had declared war on Spain, Filipinos may be forced into a war by the ancient and bitter hatred of a people whose manners and conceit his Iessons unbearable since the encounter with Russia.

WOMEN WOO JAIL TORTURE FOR BALLOT

Prison Life of Suffragettes in England Same as Accorded Felons of Blackest Stripe.

WILLING TO BECOME MARTYRS.

When One Lot Is Freed Government Locks Up Another and Treats Them Like Criminals.

Holloway prison, in North London, holds no terrors for the women of London who are fighting for the ballot. From ten to fifty of them are always undergoing imprisonment nowadays rather than pay the fine imposed on them for their threats upon conduct. As soon as one lot is released another lot is in the cells. Every suffragette in London is willing to become a "martyr O.C." Imprisonment is her smallest concern.

Most of the women are college graduates, but that comes for nothing in the prison. Nowadays the prison doors are closed to them. They are treated as ordinary malefactors. Their cells are in a cold-cell, furnished only with a cot. Afterward the prisoners are taken out in groups of three. Their clothes removed, and they are put into a single garment, marked with a arrows, which serve the purpose of American stripes.

After this the women are measured and weighed and compelled to take a bath. Then the rest of their prison clothes are given to them. They are put in a warm cell in warm coarse flannel jersey, flannel petticoat to match, a flannel jacket, a pair of stockings, shoes and shift, a check apron, a white cap, yellow badge, a Bible, a number, and a duster for a pocket handkerchief. The handkerchief used to be a sheet, but it was found that it was too soft and barely ready for the linen. The shoes are of the hideous and coarse kind, and have been cobbled quite and again until their weight is enormous. A prisoner has to scrub her cell, her clothes and her mattress and two thin blankets, which with a plank serve as her bed.

At 6 o'clock the rising bell rings. Breakfast follows, and after the suffragettes receive a tin of cocoa and a roll and bacon. After this the cells, their tin pans and buckets must be cleaned by the suffragettes themselves.

When the cell and thus have been cleaned and the housemaids' work is over, the "hours of devotion" are engaged as their proper single so the chief, the prisoner makes entire post office logic till unmasked to shape. Half an hour is seven in length. Then comes the hard hour of exercise in the yard, after which the prisoners are set to work up for the day, to continue making mail bags in their cells.

No letters are allowed to be received or sent by the suffragettes. Their prison life is most tireless. They persist in saying that they will return to jail as often as is necessary if votes are not given them. Among the leaders of the crusade for votes are Miss Pankhurst and her daughter.

TERRORIZED BY WOLVES.

Large Region in Texas Where They Have Become a Serious Menace.

The ravenous animal, Canis lupus, are making a desperate effort to avenge the wolves which infest their pastures. Nevertheless the fight which has been waged against them for many years, there seems no sign of annual increase. They seem to thrive with the settling up of the country. They are and still a menace to the live stock, but of late years cattle have spread among them to an extent that is alarming.

Many instances are known of the killing of one of these animals dying of hydrophobia, since the establishment of the state Hydrophobia institute at Austin three years ago more than six cases have gone there for treatment for mad wolf bites.

The wolves are of the coyote species. They skulk around at night and kill young calves and make away with lambs and kids. Many of the ranchmen have fourteen-year-old dogs trained to kill the wolves, without any other depending wild animals. This method of eradication is slow and very expensive.

Mad wolves are such a menace to the section that many ranchmen have built corrals around their homes as a means of protection for their wives and children against attacks by the animals. When affected with the rabies a wolf does not hesitate to enter the open door of a house or to boldly into a camp where men are sleeping and attack the occupants, they happen to run across.

The owners when suffering from an attack of hydrophobia will attack and bite fellow-creatures. The bite is dangerous rabies in the cattle and the hoofs of live stock from the same are valuable only for glue. Among the leaders in the movement against the wolves are Mr. and Mrs. Ed Ferguson, of Fredericksburg, Texas.

WAR ON ANARCHY.

Determined Effort Being Made to Stamp It Out in Chicago.

Federal, State and municipal governments are making a determined effort to stamp out the anarchistic movement in Chicago. Mayor Harrison, who is now visiting in Europe, which seems to be the home of the anarchists, has ordered the police to "do something." Acting on a complaint of public officials, that the police should have the assistance of every available force in the city and that decisive action must be taken to avert a repetition of the outbreak which came to a bloody climax in Haymarket Square in 1886.

Yesterday the police are informed, was contemplated to kill Chief Shipp at a meeting of anarchists which he attended the previous Thursday night. It was on that night, upon his return to the home of his sister, Mrs. Averbuch, 218 Washburne avenue, that the young Russian declared that he might as well kill himself.

This group of anarchists, it also has been reported, plotted to assassinate Mayor Busse and captain P. J. O'Brien on the detective bureau.

Information has reached the police that Averbuch, instead of going to high school, as his sister said he did, was in frequent communication with a band of clinkers, lawless men, who had decided upon the death of Chicago's police head. In the meeting where the plans were discussed Averbuch, it is alleged, was chosen to commit the murder. Lots were cast, and the young man was chosen to commit the crime.

Mary Averbuch says she was asleep in a room in the rear of the house when the discharge of the Haymarket revolver, in which the young man had met the chief on a street, woke her. She was awakened by her brother, who said he had shot the chief and expect trouble. Afterward, it is alleged, was chosen to commit the crime. Lots were cast, and the young man was chosen to commit the crime.

DENVER'S AUDITORIUM IS VAST.

Is Said to be the Country's Most Spacious Assembly Hall.

Work on Denver's immense auditorium which will house the Democratic national convention this year, is well under way and the building will be ready by the middle of June. The convention will open July 7. The auditorium will cost $500,000, and is built of fireproof material, with exterior stone and interior brick and stone panel. It is not a temporary structure, but intended to be a permanent home for the commander-in-chief of other conventions. It is larger than Madison Square Garden in New York, and will seat nearly twice the most spacious assembly hall in the country. Madison Square Garden seats 12,187, while the seating capacity of the Denver auditorium is 12,500.

From present indications it is contested that the attendance at the convention will be the largest that has been present at such a gathering. Low rates have been made on all the railroads, and it is the conviction will take place during the season when the travel to Colorado is heavy, the usual regard will be swelled by thousands who will come for recreation, taking advantage of the cause. The hotel man is prepared and to offer prices for rooms and meals and this problem will be kept. It is said.

A correspondent says a visit it is amazing what amounts of money are spent in Denver to entertain those who come as delegates to conventions. The organizing committee of the grand Army expend $100,000 and finished its work with a debt, so it is said, of $15,000 in debt, so lavish was the entertainment. The Elks spent $60,000 in the Denver convention, and the Elks are not the only people desiring to be entertained. WORK OF CONGRESS

In the Senate Tuesday speeches on the pending currency bill were made by Senator McCumber of North Dakota and Newlands of Nevada. The Senate passed a resolution offered by Senator Nelson calling on the Attorney General for information concerning certain proceedings in the Indian Territory affecting the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes. A number of bills of minor importance were passed. The time for the return of the country entering lands had refined the people of Oklahoma and Senator Mc. Lhead of Missouri. He declared that the new system of sending mail was an admission of the Postmaster General that the weighing in the post houses were penurious—yet she made no objection to the Senate from in front of the house and would take the necessary measures to eliminate the stinging evils of the postal service. Senator Lodge, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, said the committee had promised that no inquiry would be made.

Currency legislation was made the subject of speeches in the Senate Wednesday. Senator Hopkins opposed the Aldrich bill and Senator Hoke spoke in support of the bill. Senator Aldrich said that he had hoped to have a vote on the measure the next Wednesday. The committee approved the bill yesterday was under consideration in the House, but the discussion under Tuesday of general debate, took a wide range. Speeches on the currency bill and a resolution to inform Russian citizens in Turkey of the treatment accorded the Jews in Russia occupied the whole time of the session. Representatives Lenroot, spoke in favor of the Burleson bill to shelve Chinese immigrants. Mann, Lenroot, Gillett, Glass and Lindbergh of Minnesota talked on the bill to amend the Hitchcock of Nebraska pleaded for the placing on the free list of wood pulp and print paper.

Immediately after the opening prayer Speaker Clark of Missouri proceeded out of respect of the memory of the late Senator Frank J. Cannon, who died yesterday day. Without transacting any business the House adjourned out of respect to the memory of Senator Frazier.

The Senate Friday passed the army pay bill increasing the pay of officers from 5 to 25 per cent and the average pay of enlisted men 40 per cent. The House voted in favor of the Senate currency bill. The House unanimously adopted a resolution to investigate the charges brought by Representative Lilley of Connecticut of corrupt influences upon members of the House naval affairs committee in connection with pending legislation for a battleship fleet. The bill to pay to the archbishop of Manila, the Roman Catholic church $707,000 for damages to church property by the forces of the United States during the war.

The Senate was not in session Saturday. A part of its session of the House was devoted to the passage of 18 private claims bills. A number were passed, after the House had refused to pass a bill to give relief to the widow of Representative Cooper, who died a few days ago. The House also refused to pass a bill to give relief to the widow of Representative Cooper, who died a few days ago.

HOW NEARLY 200 SCHOOL CHILDREN LOST THEIR LIVES IN FIRE.

The diagram shows how nearly 500 school children lost their lives in the horror at North Collinwood, Ohio. From the description of eye witnesses the article is given which follows this terrible child tragedy. Marching in line after the sound of the fire bell, the children ascended a flight of stairs about up from the basement. The exits from swaying the four rooms on the ground floor escaped. The flames out of early by the fired stairway for those on the second and third floors. Those on the second floor rushed for the rear stairway and attempted to escape through the rear door. The door opened inwardly, and in their wild rush the children piled upon one another in front of the door. Shrieking they tangled down the stairs, writhing, falling, dropping, then falling, heaping to the landing, where the outside door opening, also toward outside. In this manner the twinkle of an eye a ghastly pile of trampled, mangled innocents grew, piled high between stairs and door. All except from the third floor had fallen in on the heaping, suffocating, dying victims, and, dead, dying and injured were caught in one death full grip. The smaller picture showing the burned school house was photographed a few minutes after the end of the fire. UNCLE SAM MAY DEPORT MANY.

Starts War on Anarchists by Taking Census of Public Charges.

Aroused by the attempt upon the life of Chief Shipp of Chicago, the United States government has officially swung its forces into action in a nationwide anti-anarchist campaign, and men sent out from Washington to take a census of public charges of those from to government and, local, and in addition to the work sent out by Attorney General Bonaparte to his subordinates they were established in agencies under control of Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who is especially interested in the work of the deportation of departing anarchists and see that they do not gain entrance to its country.

For the second time since the passage of the new immigration law in Europe, the immigration inspectors have started out to "land" the anarchists, immigrants, reformatories and charitable institutions of the country are being canvassed to find the number of aliens in these institutions and to report the number of public charges. It is said this is the first step in the war which the Department of Commerce and Labor will wage against anarchists and other undesirable immigrants.

The first written word from the Hughes of New York defining an attitude toward the Republican convention for President was contained in his reply to a letter of inquiry from a member of the New York State Republican Club. In the letter he was asked if he would be an office but all respond to the call of his party, and if he would be a candidate for renomination. Governor Hughes in his response made no present his name, but said that he would be a candidate for the convention if the party so decide, and that whatever its decision he will abide by it.

The expected statement from the President in reply to many circulated letters of the Taft and Roosevelt friends, has not been made. The President says he intends to wait for the convention of taking the recent action of the Republican organizations as the basis of his selections. The President says his interference in matters of patronage has been limited to insisting that appointees be men of high character and friends of the administration shall not be considered to the exclusion of others, in holding the commission of the President.

Seven territories which fall how the Republican convention of Florida had been called to order by a few scared by anti-Taft factions also disclosed the beginning of a disorder which threatened the convention forces to divide all the Southern States, which are represented in the anti-Taft factions and then trust to fellow-ence with the committee may, evidently and contending delegations seated.

The Democratic State convention in Hutchinson, Kan., on 21, unanimously adopted a resolution instructing all delegates to the Denver convention to vote as a solid vote for the nomination of William J. Bryan.

Civil War Stories

With the Tenth Massachusetts Regiment in camp at Williamsburg, Va., seven lads of Company G, of which Bridgit E. Scott, quartermaster of Camp, G. T. L., of Worcester, Mass., was one, were detailed to go out about three miles and do guard duty at a rebel house and act as pickets. On arriving at the place assigned it was found that a woman, the wife of a colonel in the Confederate service, and a sister-in-law accompanied by the only seven girls.

The men were stationed in front and rear of the house, in interest by any one who might be prowling around. The lady of the house was a non-secret rebel, yet she at times, would come out upon the front veranda of the house and while endeavoring to get upon the guard that it was not a necessary thing to be good Southerners presumes—yet she made no objection to the Yankees sitting in front of the house and would talk with them informally at times upon the stirring events of historical interest, always choosing the agreeable and social and of a sniff yonds and on weeping her delightful recreation would let her dress up to the in light of her stockings, then would throw the end of her skirt and would into the band or garter that encircled her knee, and pass into the house to the delight of the lonesome hours of the first day were no surprises—everything passed off quietly and the men during the unfled the leisure hours till near the evening, when the sentry had said a "Halt!" to the sentry, who, in response to the challenge, answered in the usual way, "Relief." "It is all right, I've got the horses." It was a grand piece of strategy. All the sentries captured. A guard house was improvised and a strong guard was placed in charge of the five Johnnies, with their horses, pig and fowls, took up the line of march under cover of the night, leaving their dilers, and entered the camp of the Tenth Massachusetts Regiment, and were asked much interest at the time of its occurrence and was discussed for several days as a mark of honor to all concerned.—Volunteer.

The Death He Feared.

To fall from wonderful health, to lose his power to do all the duties of the hero, and this feeling inspired the worthy chaplain of a regiment of Massachusetts in the Civil War, according to a story recently told by General Otis.

During a battle a small house near Darling's line was taken and occupied as a hospital. In one of the houses between operations some one discovered a stone jar filled with a white substance. The fight was at its hottest, and pieces of shell and bullets were constantly striking the house.

The chaplain commentered to get the jar out and investigate the contents. Some one said, "Lard!" and the men held up hands and knees, then stared back suddenly, and cause in an great peal from them. Thinking he might be ill, the surgeons inspired with indictment what the matter was.

"Why," explained the chaplain, "supposing one of the bullets penetrating should fall into my head, what would people say when they found under the stamp—'It was lard!'"

"It is lard that are likely to strike you these as where you are now," replied one of the doctors.

"I know, but how would it look? What would the Tenth say if their chaplain was killed shirking in such a position during an engagement?"

The good man was convinced a way to back out the jar without compromising his solitary dignity. The receptacle was found to be half full of Confederate honey, and when such was over the surgeons enjoyed a feast of sweet meter field spread upon hard rack.

Starting to the War.

When first they heard the words
They fell from Lincoln's lips
"To arms! We must be free!"
The brave of our country's brave
Went forth and donned a soldier's garb,
And 'mid the roar of cannon
And the muffled roll of sad, sad hearts
Marched out to battle they.
The husband left his sweet bride,
Whose love and tender hands
Had fallen to hold his back
From taking up the banner
To free his country's life.
And nearly a father, with quivering lips
Upon the door-step stood to see
His little arms around his neck,
Their young do not go away from me."
"Twas thus he gave up all for Blood—
To boldness he that sweet little voice
Go to the front, and with a jest
Upon that quivering little stone
Said, "Good bye, mamma, kisses—
He's gone, that from the ocean
To the sea only one at least—
We're free!" We're free!
The boy lifted his hand
Of her he loved the most,
Just forward one trembling on his lips,
"Can we?" hear above the echo,
"Shoulder arms," her pleading tones;
"Oh! come back!" the women, cannot Give you up to war."
A moment more—"Forward,"
Said the leader, and the
Is the soldier hand.
That over shoulder held
Slight thoughts
Thus published to the world
"America is free!"
Go to the graves of life and drum
They marched—they marched to battle
Days.

The Flag and the Regiment.

When William McKinley was Major McKinley he once made an address in which he described the difference between the American volunteer and the soldier of other nations. The men who were his comrades in the war between the States, he said, not only fought, but thought. To illustrate this he recalled a speech made to a regiment of older in some northern regiment whose duty it was to carry the regimental flag. The colonel addressed the boy ran on ahead, with the flag streaming in the wind, and called to the bearer, "Halt!" he cried. "Bring that flag back to the regiment."

The boy turned and replied, "Aw, you bring your regiment up to the flag!"

WASHINGTON PUBLIC GOSSIP

It takes about $20,000 men to run the Federal government and this is not a great number when we consider that there are nearly 50,000,000 of people in the country. This number includes a great army country postmaster, and others, who do not give their whole time to the government, but does not include some 40,000 privates and non-commissioned men in the army. It is notable that there are two kinds of jobs which it is hard for Uncle Sam to fill—those in the army and those in technical positions. The army is about 20,000 men short of the proper force and the number of those in the service is decreasing steadily through desertions and expiration of enlistments. Men can do better in civil life, and even West Point graduates go begging. The technical positions in the various departments in various branch of the service are hard to fill. The examinations are very strict, the requirements are of the highest and the pay is almost one-half that in civil life. It is no wonder that it is hard to get men the right sort of men. Every man is supposed to be a patriot, but that does not mean that he is willing to work for Uncle Sam for half pay, especially as this money is civil and also pay better salaries. Members of Congress voted themselves the new additional pay, but do not take into consideration the great mass of employes of the government, most of whom are working at a compensation fixed more than 20 years ago, when the cost of living was not more than half what it is at present.

The Joint Congressional Committee appointed to investigate the working of the Post Office Department has made a preliminary report suggesting several radical changes in the organization of the executive machinery of the department, chief among which is the recommendation that the actual allocation of the business of the service be placed in the hands of an officer with necessary assistants, to be appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate, for long terms, so as to insure the continuity of efficient service, which, they say, can not be expected in the fullest measure when the business is intrusted, as at present, to a postmaster general and certain assistants selected without special reference to experience and qualification and subject to frequent change. Under such a system, they say, a large railroad, commercial or industrial business would inevitably go into bankruptcy. And the Postoffice Department has exerted that fate only because the United States treasury has been available to meet deficiencies. It is not proposed to abolish the office of postmaster general, who would still have control of matters of policy as a cabinet officer.

Every four years Uncle Sam has a job that requires workmen having more than the ordinary amount of skill. It is not so much of a job as the difficult task of cleaning and painting the dome of the Capitol of the United States, which looks down on all it. Nine tons of paint are used and it requires two months work of from 30 to 40 men to complete the task. The top of the dome is so far out of the ground that a workman loses all his frightness, moving about slowly and with great care. It is not so much of a job as the work of the actual painting, as they usually have to be paid to induce them. It is the men who run up the scaffolds who take the greatest chances in being killed or injured, and men are had was scarce for which so many

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER XV.

When supper was over the cousins, who seemed to understand Mr. Jarrocks, led the way upstairs and showed Katie her room. If the furniture of the sitting room had been a Spartan in its simplicity, this was more austere yet, for there was nothing in it save a small iron bedstead, much curled from wear and use, and a high wooden box on which stood the simplest toilet requisites (the property, no doubt, of the unfortunate Kate but never been quite glad to see her) a narrow looking glass at home. The little dirty-blue room was a lesson of rest whose she would be long in our life or beyond, in her own thoughts. As she lay in bed, however, she could hear far away the muffled sound of Girdlestone's voice and the shrill tones of the old woman. They were in deep and animated conversation, though they were far from being in a quarrel. Suddenly, word, something told her that their talk was about herself, and the same instinct assured her that it boded her little good.

When Katie awoke in the morning it was some little time before she could remember where she was, or what was the cause which had brought her to a sudden change in her life. The small window of her room looked out upon a dirty grubby island. Slate, soot, and drabbing it aside, looked superior and dirty. Katie had forgotten the night before she had hoped that this prison in which she was now lodged might make a middle fly by business by comparison with the Rectory. The memories which now met her eyes soon dispelled any expectations of the kind. The room was a little less than on the other side of the house. From her window she could see the dull and sordid greyness of London and suburbs, stretching from to the east and southwards, stretching from to the west and northwards. Amid the dreariness and filth was concealed a little garden, which at present it had been for her to walk about in. Amid the dreary wastes of London there are many such gardens, and they have a few scattered needs, or an unhealthy greenish aspect, as if they had a touch of color to the foliage, but for the most part the grass and the leaves are of some sooner and tier, with its unsoiled, dry brown only to the sickly eyes of London city pals and kitchenettes had settled in the base of pitting up which ever had been left by the receding rake, and had grown into a little strange and wonderful mosaic the fringe of the scenes, which stretched away to the horizon.

A mile or two to the eastward of her eyes arose a great dark cloud, and it was smoke which flickered up into the air. This she guessed to be the Boiling Vat of Lea Chelsea, which the driver had mentioned to Jarrocks. Beyond the smoke gang, at the little hamlet, and the roofs of the boats in front of it, lay Kate's home, and beyond the roofs of the boats, and

ALWARD DIPLOMATIC.

Doesn't Support Darragh's "Financial" Views.

A Washington dispatch says: "There has been some curiosity as to what Dennis A Alward, the new candidate for congress from the eleventh district of Michigan, had to say about Congressman Darragh's assertion that in a congressional campaign it costs too much to pay the newspapers. The other members of congress shared in this curiosity because Alward was one of Darragh's most prominent supporters in the last campaign. This is what Alward says:

"Surely I do not think the newspapers of the eleventh district are for sale. I used to run a country paper myself, and I remember that the physical endurance of the compositors was about the only limit to the amount of party work performed. No pay was ever offered or received. My experience was not exceptional."

"We set columns of type and burned the midnight oil and many times went to expense we could ill afford in aid of party candidates. We did it because we wanted to do it and we shared in the glory that party success brought."

"As a matter of fact, newspapers do about as much work with out pay as any set of men I know of. The primary system of nominations makes the newspaper more than ever before the forum in which contests for the favor of the people must be argued."

"As secretary of the republican state central committee I have been associated with these newspaper men in many campaigns and not one of them ever suggested the desire for, or expectation of, pay for the expression of their opinions."

Up Lake Sentiment On County Politics.

From Boyne City Journal:

County politics will soon interest our readers, the coming warm weather being sure to start people talking about it. Boyne City will doubtless take a prominent part in the making of a ticket. It looks very much as though this city would furnish two candidates for the office of Judge of Probate as J. E. Converse's many friends insist that he shall stand as a candidate. Judge Harris will also likely be up for renomination and as both men are equally competent it will be a good lively race. There will probably be no opposition to Sheriff McVain as he has made an excellent official and is entitled to a second term. County treasurer Payton has held his position for two terms and is forced by law from relection but he has made such an exceptionally good officer that it is doubtful if he will be allowed to retire but may be called to accept some other position. Register Emery is entitled to a second term and she doubtless will if and the same is true of Prosecutor Clink. The Journal also knows of no opposition in County clerk Lewis and presumes that he will be a candidate for re-election. Boyne City will be greatly interested in its two candidates for Probate Judge as both men have a large following and both are leaders.

Good For Everybody.

Mr. Norman H. Coulter, a prominent architect, in the Detbert Building, San Francisco says: "I fully endorse all that has been said of Electric Bitters as a tonic medicine. It is good for everybody. It corrects stomach ills and kidney disorders in a prompt and efficient manner and builds up the system." Electric Bitters is the best spring medicine we know of or a druggist's counter; as a blood purifier it is unequaled. 50c. at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The Harbor Springs election, which took place last week, resulted in the defeat of the Socialist party, the only winning candidate of that party being W. H. Bussel, for member H. P. W.

Petoskey Record: C. L. Hiffenberg, formerly with Grinnell Bros., has accepted a position as travelling salesman with the Cable Piano Co. Mr. Hiffenberg has become well known and liked in the surrounding country. The desire of many of the citizens of Benzie county to change the county seat from Frankfort to Honor, is bringing out the usual pugnacious accompaniments. Thompsonville holds the balance of power, and strenuous efforts to get its votes are being made by each side.

East Jordan Enterprise: E. A. Lewis to day moved two of his buildings up from Ironton on the rce. He has a third one there which he will probably remove here in a day or two. At Ironton these buildings were not productive property, but here all can be readily rented.

Elk Rapids Progress: Mrs. Mabel Wood of Alwood, who accompanied her daughter Irene, one of the victims of the mad dog, who created such havoc in Milton and Torch Lake townships about three weeks ago, to the Pasteur Institute at Ann Arbor for treatment, returned home the first of the week. Irene will remain for a week's further treatment. She, and in fact all the patients from this section, are doing well, and the hospital staff anticipates no serious results.

Elk Rapids Progress: A letter from L. H. Bailey, our former townsman and long time citizen of Elk Rapids, orders the Progress and tells of his excellent health and enjoyment among the friends of his childhood in St. John N. B. He writes: "having been separated from them forty years or more necessitate in every case an introduction, after which comes the hearty hand-shake and oftimes it takes the whole four hands shake to do justice to the occasion; but to the greater number of those I once knew I am obliged to visit the cemetery. If there is anything that will add to our thinking of the past, present and future is a case of this kind.

The Traverse City Record says the managing editor of that paper, J. W. Hannen, and Rev. H. N. Holsapple, assistant superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league, who spoke in Cadillac last Sunday, have received letters from the "Black Hand" society. The one to Rev. Mr. Holsapple warned him that if he did not get out of Grand Traverse county in 24 hours his life would pay the penalty. Presumably, he says, this is done to intimidate him because of his activity in the anti-saloon campaign being waged in that county. However, he does not appear to be much frightened as he announces he will continue through the campaign in Grand Traverse and Wexford counties. Mr. Hannen was advised to "lay low." His paper has exposed the local option cause.

Petoskey Record: A deal was closed, Tuesday, whereby a majority of the stock of the Individual Gas Light Co. was purchased by Mr. W. D. Hall and the machinery, fixtures and unmanufactured stock on hand will be moved to Reed City, where it will be used as a side line by a company in Reed City, who are now manufacturing gas engines, and by whom F. S. Vincent, patentee of the of the Individual Gas Light, is employed. The Individual Gas Light Co. was organized, three years ago, by Petoskey capital, and started out with bright prospects. Many of the plants made by the company are now in use in this city and surrounding towns and are a success in every way; but lack of capital and proper management have made it advisable to close out the business.

Traverse City Record: Uncle Dan Walspole was taken very ill the morning of his home in Hatches Crossing and for a time it was thought the end was near. Yesterday he walked from Traverse City to his home after spending the night in the city, and having been suffering for a few days with a cold the walk was too much for him. This morning he was unable to rise, and for about an hour was unconscious. Inform among the city yesterday afternoon on his seven-mile round, Uncle Dan called at the home of Mrs. Dora Roberts and bade her good-bye, shaking hands with her. Mrs. Roberts thought this was a motion on his part as he had never done that before. He stated that he did not feel very well, and that his cold was bothering him. In spite of this he bravely set out for home on foot, but it may be the last walk he will ever take.

Traverse City Eagle: Peter Olson, a hunter from Fife Lake, brought in two lynx ticks to the county clerk for the bounty and after the clerk had taken the parts of the head required by law and paid the hunter $5 cash, the pelts became Olsen's property. One of these animals was killed in Fife Lake township and the other just over the line in Union township. Both were killed in the latter part of January. Mr. Olsen reports that there are quite a few lynx in that region and that they are killing many partridge. He has known of them claiming full grown deer but never knew of them being able to kill one larger than a fawn. During the winter Mr. Olsen has killed and caught eight red foxes and got a shot at a black fox, but with the high wind and the distance he just barely grazed the animal. The pelt of a black fox is worth from $400 to $700.

Traverse City specials: One of the hottest local option fights in the state is being waged in Grand Traverse county, and especially in Traverse City. In connection with the fight a good story has come to light in regard to the saloon keepers throwing an anchor to windward in case prohibition should carry. Traverse City is situated on Grand Traverse bay and the southeast point of Leelanau county goes right in the city limits of Traverse City. The line is about two miles from the heart of the city, and the district is thinly settled. Land has never been 1 ½ p. but we scout the local option fight began to cut in the Hyde row property immediately bought the land outright right along the line out of Grand Traverse county. It is now impossible to get a piece of land along a strip about a mile long and if the county should go dry a solid line of saloons will be built along here. Then a sheriffs of expense of regulating and policing will be shouldered on Leelanau county, even though all the patronage comes from Traverse City.

Look Forward.

Forget your failure and failures. Remember that success is long in coming, you have to teach, the realize courage of worthiness of spirit which they should disclose to you—the vanity that preserves, the pride that hardens, the greed that corrupts. Let your pear be not a ball and chain tied to your ankle to keep you back, but a journal to tell you what road you have traveled. Time, looking back only long enough to see where you are and what your course should be, forms the chime that are behind and pr forward.—The Outlook.

—Great Spokes went to Grand Rapids Thursday on business.

—Charlevoix chapter O. E. S will have a special meeting April 1st for work.

—W. F. Harsha, of Traverse City, was the guest of his brother, H. S Harsha, over Sunday.

—The May state primary school fund apportionment, it is reported, will amount to $5 per school child.

—Benzie county voters will decide at the polls April 6 whether the county seat shall move to Honor or remain at Frankfort.

—Mrs. E. Z. Waltz, who has been spending the winter here with her brother, H. C. Spikes, left for her home in Belleville Mich., last Thursday.

—Chas. Hoe, of Harbor Springs, has taken the contract to build the boats in dock in this city. The dock will have 95 foot frontage on the harbor.

—Attorney J. J. Tweddle, of Traverse City, was in town on business Saturday. Mr. Tweddle is attorney for and one of the corporation of Grand Island, which we have large lumbering interests on High Island.

—Big Rapids has been chosen by representatives of the interscholastic association as the place in which the next annual field day will be held. The date has not been set, but the event is usually held in the latter part of May. Stanislaus, Ludington, Cadillac, Evart, Reed City, Howard City, Big Rapids and Greenville are members.

—Lying on the beach of Pine Lake, near Ironton, probably since the time of the dinosaurs, was a boulder of about three tons weight. It is oval in form, and upon the upper side, standing out in bold relief, is a perfectly formed cross placed there by some other operation of nature in the bygone ages. Last week Ed. Stafford, with a force of men and two teams removed it to the Brookside cemetery, where it was placed on the lot of Hon. John Nicholas, where it will serve as a family monument, and there are few memorials in that silent city of the dead more valuable or appropriate.

—Operated by water power and managed by a non-partisan board of business men serving without remuneration, Marquette's municipal lighting plant has just closed the most successful fiscal year to its history with a net profit of more than $10,000. The plant is enabled to show substantial earnings each year and yet dispose of its electrical current for power and illumination at the lowest rates prevailing in the state. The rates charged for electric illumination are 5 cents per kilowatt hour for business places and 7 cents for residences. There are few houses that are not lighted by electricity. All supplies are furnished and all wiring is done by the city at actual cost.

FOR THE LIFE SAVERS.

The Text of the Bill for the Benefit of the Life Saving Service.

A bill to increase the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service of the United States.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this Act the compensation of district superintendents in the United States Life Saving Service shall be as follows: For the superintendents of the first, second, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth districts, two thousand two hundred dollars per annum each; for the superintendents of the third and ninth districts, two thousand dollars per annum each; for the superintendent of the eighth district, one thousand nine hundred dollars per annum. That the pay of keepers of life-saving stations shall be one thousand dollars per annum each, and that the pay of the number one surfman in each of the crews of the life-saving stations shall be at the rate of seventy dollars per month.

Sec. 2. That every keeper of a life saving station and every surfman in the Life Saving Service of the United States shall be entitled to receive one ration per day or, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, commutation therefor at the rate of thirty cents per ration.

Sec. 3. That section eight of Act of May fourth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, entitled "An Act to promote the efficiency of the Life Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck," is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 8. That if any keeper or member of a crew of a life-saving station shall hereafter die by reason of perilous service or any wound or injury received or disease contracted in the Life Saving Service in the line of duty, having a widow, or a child or children under sixteen years of age, or a dependent mother, such widow and child or children and dependent mother shall be entitled to receive, in equal portions, during a period of two years, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, the same amount, payable quarterly as far as practicable, that the husband or father or son would be entitled to receive as pay if he were alive and continued in the service: Provided, That if the widow shall remarry she shall forfeit the remaining two years' pay that, during the said two years, her portion of said amount shall cease to be paid to her from the date of her remarriage, but shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries under the provisions of this section, if there be any; and if any child shall arrive at the age of sixteen years during the said two years, the portion of said child shall cease to be paid to such child from the date on which such age shall be attained, but shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries, if there be any."

Sec. 4. That all Acts or parts Acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

The SENTINEL has private advices from Washington that the above bill has passed both houses of Congress, and now goes to the president. It is certain to be approved within the next week.

Circuit Court.

In the trial of Horton and Jodway for the murder of an Indian, the jury brought in a verdict Thursday of manslaughter. Counsel for accused made a motion for a new trial, which will be argued today.

In the case of Chas. Hopkins, of Boyne City, charged with an attempt to kill his wife, the Judge took the case from the jury and turned the defendant over to a board of physicians to determine his mental condition. He was declared insane and sent to the hospital for the criminal insane at Ionia.

Two indecent exposure cases ended by a plea of guilty. Sentence deferred.

The civil case of Sheller vs. Fleischer, resulted in a verdict of no cause of action. Sheller sued to recover on certain notes which Fleischer claimed were secured by false pretenses.

The court to day is engaged on a dog case from Bay township. Plaintiff shot Jamisher's dog, and he sues to recover damages.

Mr. J. H. Kilbourn of Chicago, who owns some land on Fox Island will put out a fruit orchard there this spring.

Rev. John Deets formerly of Central Lake but been appointed chairman of the civil service committee for the Crow Creek Reservation, South Dakota.

Covell Gathering Strength.

Evidences are multiplying that indicate, with reasonable certainty, the nomination of George E. Covell for Congress.

That portion of the eleventh district that embraces the Grand Traverse region—and that means the entire region excepting Leelanau—will be a unit for the Traverse City man.

Information comes that Mr. Covell has a strong hold in the central counties of the district, and that he is gaining steadily even south of that section.

The strength of Mr. Covell is of the character that cannot fail to hold his own and grow by its own sheer force, because all the elements that enter into his cause but reflect the strength and force of the candidate as a man and a citizen.

First of all, Mr. Covell is a person, measured by the existing standard of wealth. Within our own recollection he worked in a shingle mill but a short distance from the city in which he now resides. His progress from the shingle machine to his present high position in the federal department of justice was made without the aid of a dollar that he did not earn. His new position of industry, integrity and cool, level headed application to duty constituted the only reserve capital from which he drew in his struggle for recognition in his chosen profession. Few have succeeded better, and few have traversed a harder road to success.

Mr. Covell's strong, yet genial and engaging personality, coupled with his well known fact, mark him as a leader among his fellows, both in his profession and out of it. In common with all of us, he may have made mistakes, but when he discovers the error he owns it up like a man.

If Mr. Covell is elected to Congress—and he will be—his influence will be felt wherever he directs it. He will not be a wall flower, and he can not be an idler. He is just the sort of a man that is needed by the eleventh district in the lower house of Congress. He is the sort of a man that does not have to lay up newspapers, either with money nor anything else.

GOOD FOR BEAVER ISLAND.

An Increase of Mail Service Ordered for Our Island Neighbors.

Notice has been received from Washington that the Charlevoix Beaver Island daily mail service, heretofore confined to July, August and September, has been increased to include June and October.

Beginning June first, the mail service between Charlevoix and St. James will be from that date to Oct. 31st. Congratulations to Beaver Island.

A Conspicuous Success.

We do not know that J. M. Harris is a candidate for re election to the office of Judge of Probate. Indeed we do not know who is aspiring to that office.

But whether Judge Harris is a candidate or not, a word concerning his record will not be amiss. The office is semi judicial, and should be held by a lawyer—the better the lawyer the better the Judge. Judge Harris brought to the office the keen perception and legal acumen of a good lawyer.

Few people realize that errors and reckless action in the Probate office weave themselves into property titles, that in future generations, perhaps, may work great wrong and injustice. It is the clear headed lawyer in the probate office who guards the rights of the widow and orphan.

Judge Harris has shown himself to be peculiarly fitted for the office. He is better judge today than he was four years ago, just as he is a better lawyer now than then. Experience in either line of duty ripens and broadens. And we believe Judge Harris' knowledge of the duties of probate judge is too valuable to the people of Charlevoix county to be dispensed with at this time.

Looks Like a Sure Thing For Covell.

From the Traverse City Record:

While it is yet early to make predictions, the sentiment in favor of George E. Covell, of this city, for the congressional nomination to succeed A. L. Darragh in the Eleventh district has crystallized in such a manner as to indicate his nomination at the September primaries beyond a reasonable doubt. Mr. Covell's previous campaign gained for him many new friends and strong support, and the retirement of the Mr. Darragh leaves Mr. Covell with much stronger chances for nomination than he had two years ago. Friends F. Dodge, Ionia county, and Dennis E. Alward, of Clare county, are Mr. Covell's opponents, but Mr. Covell is so well known and has secured such a strong foot-hold in the various counties in the district since his campaign two years ago that he has many advantages in the contest of being nominated.

Mr. Covell is certainly receiving splendid support from many newspapers in the district. Ben Barker, of the Reed City Clarion, came out this week with a very strong endorsement of Mr. Covell's candidacy. The Charlevoix Sentinel, which opposed Mr. Covell two years ago in favor of Mr. Darragh, now comes out with a generous tribute as to his ability and his right to ask from the people of the district their votes for his nomination. Many other newspapers in the district are warmly supporting Mr. Covell and the fact that his support is so universally solicited and without compensation reflects the sentiment of the people of the district. The indications are at this time that Mr. Covell will be a sure winner, and if he should be, the district will have one of the strongest and most progressive men that ever represented this section of the state in Washington.

The paper birch is a tree to which the average person seldom has once given a passing introduction. The summer visitor often gains a fair acquaintance with its bark and learn that it is used for making canoes, baskets and similar ornamental and useful articles. In some places the wood also supplies the local demand for fuel. Outside of these uses, the public has little knowledge of the practical value of the birch. As a matter of fact, it is an exceedingly important wood in a number of woodworking industries, and there are details utilizes for the manufacture of which no satisfactory substitute has yet been found. There are millions of feet of birch yet in Charlevoix county.

Reed City Clarion for Covell.

From the Clarion:

After slight, the political situation in the 11th Congressional district for some time and chilling with all the candidates, all jolly good fellows, the Clarion has concluded to "whip its cantor" where it left off two years ago, with the well known Traverse City attorney, who is also United States District Attorney for Western Michigan, Hon George G. Covell, for Congress from this district. His friends over the district believe him eminently qualified for the position. Mr. Covell is a self-made man, graduating from the law department of the University, and for a number of years previous his partnership was one of the leading attorneys of Northern Michigan. While Mr. Covell is one of the best attorneys in Northern Michigan, he is also recognized as one of the leading orator of Northern Michigan. His ability ranks with the best in the state, and he would reflect great credit on his constituency as a member of the lower house of Congress. Mr. Covell is not narrow between the lines. He is broad enough to represent the whole Republican party of this district, and would make a capable, fearless and faithful official as Congressman. Why no Covell.

Gist of the Highway Law.

The birch has been a radical change in the highway laws of the state of Michigan which goes into effect April 1, 1908. At the time of the next annual township election the summer visitor often gains a fair acquaintance with its bark and learn that it is used for making canoes, baskets and similar ornamental and useful articles. In some places the wood also supplies the local demand for fuel. Outside of these uses, the public has little knowledge of the practical value of the birch. As a matter of fact, it is an exceedingly important wood in a number of woodworking industries, and there are details utilizes for the manufacture of which no satisfactory substitute has yet been found. There are millions of feet of birch yet in Charlevoix county.

Kind Words Spoken Of Our Neighbor.

Petoskey News: A. T. Washburne has closed a deal, with experienced Chicago parties, whereby the immense gold storage plant recently leased by him from the J. R. Booth Company will be taken over and utilized in a general produce and farm products business, from which the city and surrounding country will be largely benefited. Additional quantities of ice will be immediately stored with this in view, over a thousand tons being already stored in the ice house by the Finety Ice Company, who have leased that department from the Reg Company.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

It was Saturday—the third Saturday since Girdlestone and his ward had disappeared. Dumdale had fully made up his mind that, go where he would, Kate should not escape him this time. On the two consecutive Saturdays the young girl had managed to get away from him, and had been absent each time until the Monday morning. This time, he had the thought was a bitter one, that she was now spend in some unknown retreat in the company of Kate and of her guardian. This time he should not get away without revealing his destination.

The two young men reached the office until two o'clock. When Kate put on his hat and coat, intending it to close, on the whether was bitterly cold. Tom at once picked up his white stick and followed him out into Fenchurch street, as close to his heels as the jogging hour had not shot on the one before the other passed through. Each glanced round at him when he heard the footsteps. There was no longer any pretense of civility between the two, whenever there even met it was only to exchange glances of hatred and defiance.

A hansom was passing down the street, and Kate, with a motion of command to the driver, sprang in. Fortunately another hansom was close at hand, and Tom was still waiting by the curb. Tom ran up to it. Never had an old cab flown as he said: "Whatever you do, don't let it get away from you!" Tom promised that he a number of fine words, nodded, and whipped up his horse.

It happened that this same horse was either a faster or a fresher one than that which held the Girdlestone party. The two cabs rattled down Eastcheap, then down Eand on the Embankment, and round by the old Temple Bar, and finally down Fleet street, then down Ludgate hill and through the Ludgate gate, and down one of the Embankments, and down one of the Embankments, and down one of the Embankments

GRAVES WERE FOUND EMPTY.

Bodies of Indianapolis People Buried in Cloth Shrouds by Ghouls.

A K. McClurkey of Indianapolis and Jamie McClurkey of Indianapolis went to the Kennard burying ground near Dublin, Charles, Ohio, to decorate the graves of their mother and children that they might be transferred to Crown Hill cemetery, Indianapolis, where the lots of Allen H. McClurkey, husband and father, was recently buried. Upon opening the graves, they found that the graves of the bodies had been robbed by ghouls, and there was but one shroud left in each grave, and that was used for a "Confederate uniform." The dates on the tombstones were John A. McClurkey, aged 20 years and at the time of death, and his mother, aged 40 years, died respectively, Mr. McClurkey died in Indianapolis, Feb. 12. The wife is a prominent Democrat. The Kennard burying ground is one of the old ones in the county, and there are many graves in the country for miles around. Ghouls have been reported to have been at work in the Kennard burying ground some of the old graves in the country, and there are many graves with no stones to mark the place of the dead, and sentimental people would be terrified to the core if they knew that the graves had been robbed, and the dead carried away to open the graves to verify their suspicions.

WOULD UNITE BIBLE CLASSES.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Forms Organization of Young Men.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has formed a Bible class organization in Sunday schools all the Bible classes in the country, the annual meeting of the new association will be held on the anniversary of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church, Rockefeller's church, on Friday evening, April 3. Nearly every great city in the New York will send a representative. It is Mr. Rockefeller's belief that one of the men of the Bible classes in the Bible classes have been the salvation of the boys, and having every Bible class about the "big brother" plan of work, the Sunday school will be a social results in the Bible class. Mr. Rockefeller is a teacher in a Bible class of the class designs himself as well as a big brother. The boys are sometimes among fellows whose opinions must be such as to prevent them rising from their sphere in life.

LOVE IN DAKOTA WORTH $2,500.

First Time It and Affection Have Figured as Value in Deed.

"Love and affection and $2,500" is the unusual consideration set forth in the records at Aberdeen, S. Da., as the purchase price of 240 acres of valuable farming land deed it by Joseph T. Peck of Oregon to Mrs. Grace Parker and Miss Ella Stone, two married daughters of Dalton, Ohio. This is the first time "love and affection" have been recognized in South Dakota as consideration, but the value of the property indicates that "love" and "affection" are each worth $2,500 in this case.

Actor Hitchcock Acquitted.

Raymond Hitchcock, the comedian, was acquitted in New York yesterday of the charge of Justice Blanchard. He was arraigned on the charge that during his wife's suit against Helen Van Higgins, when she was supposed to be in Europe, Hitchcock had her hacked and became convinced that there was a conspiracy against Mrs. Van Higgin. Hale Clarkes, who was supposed to have been the hacker, testified that he was hired by Hitchcock to follow the woman.

PRICE OF FALSE ECONOMY.

Faulty Construction Cause of Cleveland School Horror.

In his verdict on the childhood school horror the coroner blames cutting conditions, but no scientific fault is charged to any one. Fritz Hilliard, the janitor, is exonerated. But the fearful fire trap, crowded with children, crumpled to death in the corridors of the fourth floor, is said to have gone mad. He was badly burned while trying to save the children.

The coroner found that the fire escapes were on the front and rear, and was caused by overheated pipes when quitted the skill way. The death of the children, he says was due to faulty construction which prevented the escape of the children. Hitter was jammed in the doorway because of the turn in the hall to get to the death of 165 children in the burned high school building in South Collinwood. It was an error of false economy, which proved costly beyond compare. Three years ago school door only slide the outer doorway. It was cheaper to pull a partition from inside than to build storm doors outside. So the partition was built.

Then, when the children rushed out well for children if they had rushed into the outer door, but, coming downstairs in a rush, many swerved toward the cold and locked bolted partition that ended the hall. A MARCH ALLEGORY.

BRADLEY GETS THE TOGA.

Former Governor of Kentucky Elected to Fill Senate Vacancy.

After a contest remarkable for its duration, Governor Beckham, Democrat, forgave Mr. William O'Connell, Republican, who was defeated in the race for the United States senate, the deadlock in the legislature, the delegation from Kentucky was selected in the person of Ex-Governor Bradley, of Kentucky.

The sensation was five years ago when Bradley was the Republican nominee. Beckham was then governor and the Democrats were in control of the legislature. The balloting was long and hard. Bradley had been going to Washington for years and the struggle attracted national attention. Bradley's election was effected by the defection of four Democrats, who refused to support Beckham.

Senator Bradley is one of the best known politicians in the State and has gained wide distinction as a citizen lawyer. He was born in Garrard, Ky., in 1847 and was admitted to the bar by special act of the Legislature in 1872, being under 21 years of age. In 1876 he was elected prosecuting attorney and in 1888 received 100 votes for Vice President in the national convention. In 1896 he was nominated as Kentucky's candidate for the presidency. He was first elected to the United States senate in 1905 beat all political records in Kentucky and formed a respected Democratic majority of 40,000 into a Republican plurality of 50,000.

Senator Bradley has long been prominent in Republican national politics and at one time declined the appointment by President Harrison, of minister to Corea. He is an unrelated story hitherto

FIVE YEARS FOR WALSH.

Convicted Chicago Banker Sentenced to Fort Leavenworth Prison.

John R. Walsh, the Chicago banker, convicted of the misuse of depositors' funds, was sentenced to serve trial by Judge A. B. Anderson in the Federal court and was sentenced to five years in the government prison at Fort Leavenworth. The sentence was five years and a fine of $5,000 on each of the counts of the old Chicago National Bank was sentenced, but it is to run concurrently with the sentence of the Federal court. The sentence was the result of a motion by the defense for the defense in their plea for a new trial were overruled. Walsh, who is his opinion, received in some depth the sentence of the court and the decision of guilt shown in the hearing overruled that the trial had been fair and continuing of the guilt of Mr. Walsh, but in pronouncing sentence the court took into account the character of the age and former standing of the defendant to lessen the sentence. Although the offense that the short term would serve the purpose of the law as much as a longer judgment.

EVELYN SEEKS DIVORCE.

After Steading by Thaw Since Tragedy, Wife Would Be Free.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw has instituted proceedings in the Indian territory for marriage to Harry K. Thaw. The action is based on the allegation that the defendant was insane when the union was contracted. Mrs. William Cooper Thaw is made a co-defendant.

It is understood the attorneys for Mrs. Thaw will spread practically all the testimony of insanity introduced at the last trial of Thaw to prove that he was practically insane at the time he to legally contract a marriage. Alienists will probably be prominently in the witness and the men who appeared as experts for Jerome in Thaw's trial will be summoned as witnesses in Evelyn's behalf. Mrs. Thaw's lawyer denied the report that it had been agreed to settle $50,000 on the younger Mrs. Thaw. He denied also the report of the allowance of $12,000 a year for Mrs. He also emphatically denied the report that Evelyn is considering a return to the stage, saying: "Mrs. Evelyn Thaw has no plans for the immediate future."

NOTES OF CURRENT EVENTS.

The fifth state Senate has a young octogenarian in Mr. Bedell, who is 80 years of age.

Miss Lydia A. White, aged 80, a real daughter of the American revolution, died at Cincinnati yesterday.

THREATENS TO BLOW UP BANK AND KILL.

Stranger Demands $5,000 of Vice President of the Merchants' National at Omaha.

SHOWS ALLEGED EXPLOSIVE.

Apparently Demented Man Is Lured to Restaurant, Where Officers Quickly Disarm Him.

An unknown assailant entered the Merchants' National Bank of Omaha, demanded a bundle of $5,000 and displaying a bottle believed to contain nitroglycerin, threatened to blow up the bank if he received it and escaped with. He was captured by a ruse.

The man entered the bank soon after the doors were thrown open and asked to see Vice President Lowe. Mr. Lowe seated himself opposite the stranger, who began talking in a rambling manner about having had $5,000 in the National Bank of Commerce in Kansas City when that bank failed.

"And since all you fellows are in together, you had just better hand over my money, or I'll blow you and your bank and all of us to smithereens," he concluded, producing a threatenous bottle containing a thick yellow liquid.

"Don't you make a mess," he added. "This is filled with nitroglycerin, so you more one move and I'll blow you up."

"You don't want to do yourself, do you?" quietly asked Mr. Lowe.

"Oh, yes, I came in here ready to die," responded the stranger. "I'm sick of life and everybody in this building with me."

Judging that the man seemed thin and plucked, Mr. Drake asked if he wasn't hungry.

"I've been studying over this matter for several days and have not eaten a thing for forty-eight hours," answered the man with the bottle.

"Well, we'll go into the back and talk this over," proposed Mr. Drake.

"All right, but don't try my nasty business at you or a dead aim," replied the anarchist.

President Hamilton of the bank entered the next room during the conversation and heard enough of it to realize how to know what was going on. As Mr. Drake and the stranger left the room together Mr. Hamilton telephoned the police for detectives and followed the two men to a nearby restaurant.

Mr. Drake and the stranger were on opposite sides of the table when three detectives accompanied by Mr. Hamilton, entered the room. Slipping up behind the stranger, the detectives pinned his arms and seized his bottle before he knew what was happening.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

How Children Are Being Trained in Principles of Economy.

"There are now nearly 200,000 pupils who are regularly depositing their savings in the school savings banks throughout the country and who are thereby being taught useful lessons in economy." The founder of the system is J. H. Thiry of Long Island, who created the first school savings bank six years ago and who has since seen the system greatly develop. The plan is simple.

Teachers in the public schools give to the pupils a number of the Monday morning session to collecting the savings of the children. The deposits recorded in the ordinary roll books, are turned over to the principal, who places them with a bank or trust company.

The child's weekly deposit may be one cent; it may be ten—whatever the boy or girl can spare during the week. When the pupil's savings amount to $1, a new bank book is given. Except in case of sickness or of removal from the city, deposits cannot be withdrawn until the amount reaches $5, and then only on the second Monday of every month. Interest of 3 per cent is paid on the deposits.

Since the system was introduced the records show that the pupils of 1,500 schools in 22 States saved the great total of $5,825,514. Of this amount $75,000 was withdrawn, leaving a balance at present of nearly $5,000,000 to the credit of 1,7972 little depositors.

ALL AROUND THE GLOBE.

Twenty-five League speakers from all over the country will stump Nebraska in the coming campaign against the saloons.

Three Italians named Joseph Pirolino, a California farmer, aimed to please, robbed him of $1,000 and blows he into the Sacramento river, the dragged himself out and he was taken to a Sacramento hospital.

Jacob Schilli of Minneapolis has been granted the custody of his divorced daughter on condition that he live in Los Angeles. Cal., and "keep her away from the girl."

The Rev. R. J. Campbell of the City Temple, London, proposes to found a new religion, which he will call "the religion of the spirit," the central idea being the doctrine of the Holy Ghost.

Attorney Taylor of San Francisco has received a letter from President Roosevelt in which he expects to be on the west coast to greet the Pacific fleet. Secretary Metcalf will meet the fleet at Magdalena.

John Cox, a clerk, went to the Bellevue hospital, New York, and asked to be "operated" upon; he said all the organs in his body ache and he thought he was strangled.

Mrs. Dorothea I. Martin has been indicted at Oakland, Cal., on a charge of having dynamited the residence of Supervisor Jesse Frank Ogden in March, 1907.

It is now impossible for the Republican party of Kansas to carry the State, the Democrats have nominated a Republican who is a Democrat.

The Senate was not in session Saturday, but the House of Home were affected by an opportunity, under rules of the House, to dispose of their views on topics of the day. Among other subjects before the House were resolutions of inquiry into the Chinese, Harlington and Quincy Bill-Lamont controversy, the meat and grain-gambling consumption and Congressmen Bind and Thomas, of New York, and Lamont, of Illinois, and Tagart, his days were Bind and given jail sentences for complying with the contempt proceedings in connection with the Chinese, of New York, a freight hauler, and Lamont, of Illinois, a grain gamblers, were fined $500 each.

WORK OF CONGRESS

A message from the President and reports from the committee on military affairs on the Brownsville affray occupied the time of the Senate during the early part of last week. Considerable. A Sabbath day's work was performed by Senator Warren, chairman of the committee on military affairs, that a bill will soon be introduced for the relief of the discharged colored soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Regiment under certain conditions. The Aldrich bill was discussed by Senator Clark of Arkansas, who declared that he would vote for neither the Aldrich nor the Bulkeley substitute. After the passage of several bills on the calendar the Senate adjourned. Discussion of the postoffice appropriation bill in the House resulted in the amendment of some of the many important parts of Charles Hiter-despite the protests of Mr. Tawney. The latter claimed that the Senate had crowded out the provisions of the Indian appropriation bill, which had passed the House, and that the House was compelled to accept the Senate amendments. Mr. Tawney said

THE GRAND OLD MAN.

General Isaac DeGraaf Toll Called to His Reward.

From the Tuesday Independent.

Nothing has so shocked this community as the announcement this morning of the death of that magnificent veteran and splendid citizen, General Isaac DeGraaf Toll, "the Hickory's Grand Old man," who died this morning from pneumonia.

General Toll has been practically confined to the house during the most of the inclement weather of the past two months, and for some days has been rather ailing, but retired at his usual hour last night with no especial notation of imminent position or illness, but was suddenly stricken and his passing, which was speeded by his advanced age, came as stated, and the whole community is cast into gloom and mourning.

General Toll was born in Glenville, New York, on the first day of December, 1818, and was therefore more than ninety years of age, yet was his eye bright, his intellect clear and vigorous, neither were his natural forces abated. He was one of those men to whom everyone naturally turned for advice and help, and he was never known to fail in an emergency, for his judgment was the clearest and safest order, and as he was well equipped for the emergencies of life everyone turned to him at such times.

General Toll has filled every office, and conscientiously performed the duties thereof, from supervisor to state senator, and was always found a valuable member. He was an efficient soldier and officer in the struggle of his nation with Mexico, and was rapidly promoted, after distinguished service, in which he was a number of times wounded.

At one time General Toll was examiner of patents at Washington, a position of which he was peculiarly fitted by his knowledge of technics, and was offered many other places which he declined owing to press of business.

He was an intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln, and General Lewis Cass who declined an honor to count among their friends and advisors such a man as General Toll.

He has earned a well deserved reward where he has gone, but our loss is great and we shall miss him more and more every day, as matters arise in which we need his sterling qualities.

As usual as out-of-town relatives can be communicated with, arrangements will be made for the funeral services.

Agnes M. Jarvis.

Agnes M. Jarvis, well known in Charlevoix and vicinity, being a Charlevoix girl was won the distinction of directing and pulling up the most successful home talent affair every produced in the city. "Heiecca's Triumph" a play entirely of Indian, sixteen in the cast. It was clean and sparkling with wit and songs, full of surprises and laughable climaxes. The specialties were bright and up to date and pleased immensely.

Not only was it the largest, but the best attended entertainment that has ever attended a like performance.

Boyne City Journal: The Morrison pillo driver was brought over here last Saturday and is being used to drive piles for the foundation of the new Badger Wooden Ware factory. The driving will not so near the river that a pile foundation is necessary. The work up there is going along as fast as possible and Mr. Goodwin is straining every point to hurry it up.

ALLIE MOORE VICTOR.

The Charlevoix Boy Wins Another Skating Race at Minneapolis.

Allie Moore, of Charlevoix, the world's champion roller skater, won another race at Minneapolis last week, but broke two fingers and a thumb doing it. At last accounts Moore was in Milwaukee, but expects to be in Chicago soon for a series of races. A Minneapolis paper has the following concerning the race:

"In the two mile race at the Casino rink, last night between Hadley Davidson, the world's champion roller skater, and Allie Moore, former holder of the same title, Davidson was defeated by more by not more than a second of time. Moore covered the two miles in 6:14, remarkable time for the course, with numerous laps. Davidson was in good trim, but was unable to cope with Moore, in spite of the fact that the winner fell during the race and allowed Davidson to pass him.

The race was the most exciting that has been held on the Casino floor this season. The time was fast and the closeness of the finish made it unusually interesting. Moore took the lead and kept it for 12 laps, when he was passed by Davidson. The lead was again assumed by Moore, in the eighth lap. Davidson then took the lead in the sprint, but in the twenty-fourth lap, Moore flew past him and closed in on the finish.

The defeat to Davidson after the good showing he made the night before made him eager to go on the track again and tonight the two will race for honors."

Charlevoix Ahead, as Usual.

This city claims the honor of having the honor of having the oldest Chemistry in Michigan who is still actively engaged at the bench with works every day, just the same as he used to more than half a century ago. This man is George L. Booth, who is easily the dean of all active southern Michigan tradesmen. He is eighty-two years old and has worked continuously at the moulding trade since 1843.

Mr. Booth gets around as sprightly as any man of fifty and prides himself on being able to turn out as much work in a day as he ever could. He has been honored with public offices, and positions of trusts during the half-century he has been a resident of Elston Rapids, is a prominent member of the Masonic order and generally looked upon by the people as one of the "grand old men" in the town. He is the last of the pioneers who settled here in 1836—Elston Rapids paper.

Charlevoix has Elston Rapids skinned a mile on the aged shoemaker case.

Harvey S. Cook, of this city, was born in Connecticut in 1816, and will be 92 years of age in October next.

Mr. Cook is also a shoemaker, and works on his bench with as much vigor and skill as he did seventy years ago. He has worked at the trade at 16, and has followed it since.

Uncle Harvey is about the streets every day, and says he can throw the shoe man of his age and weight in Charlevoix.

This last tipsy of Kate's was by fare to us successive of incredulity and doubt which had proved over the face of the lady before. It was successful in the object, for the ring of truth was in her tale spoke and the look of anxiety and fear upon her face were but genuine to be mistaken. The lady drew her hand to her to bring the carriage as near the door as you can, and I will bring a light of Kate's face.

"My dear," she said, "you may safely tell me everything. Whatever I can do to shield you shall be done, and where I am powerless there are others who are my friends and may be of assistance. Sally is my name—Mrs. Lavinia Scully of London. Don't, my dear girl, tell me that you are afraid to trust me, for we know we can get matters right."

This encouraged Kate wiped away the tears which had been brought to her eyes by the unusual word of a friendly voice. Looking forward as far as she could, she presenting herself as being in a very long her arm round a great branch which shot across the path of the lady, she said, "It is so few words as she could a detailed account of all that had happened. She described her guardian's anxiety that she should marry her cousin, her refusal, the sudden departure from London, her flight at the Priory, the manner in which she was all alone and in a strange place, and the reasons which made her leave her life. In attempt to make her story as clear as possible, she narrated the scene with Mr. Jorrocks and her sudden meeting, when her guardian had tempted her to compact with strangers. Indeed, Kate was so completely led from her story was that which had occurred the night before, for she felt that it might put too severe a tax upon Mrs. Sally's credulity. Indeed, Kate was not at all surprised at her ready belief in her story, for she felt that the lady would do, if she delayed longer the fresh night air had fires her retreat was available, and then how vain all regrets would be.

It seemed to her that there was very little risk in the matter. The girl had been no communication with any one, for of those around her Mrs. Jorrocks was in her doings. Rebecca Taylorb was sleep and true, and Stevens knew nothing. Every one at the country side had seen the the invalid young lady at the Priory. Who would be prepared to hear that she had passed away? He dare not call in any local medical man, but his inventive brain had overcome the difficulty, and had hit upon a device by which he might deceive both doctors and coroner. If all went as he had planned it, it was difficult to see any chance of detection. In the case of a poorer man the fact that the girl's money reverted to him might arouse suspicion, but he rightly argued that with his great reputation he also would ever dream that such a consideration could have weight with him.

Having sent the magnum of oil and a taken a final look, John Girdlestone left more at his ease. He was proud of his own energy in thinking out his whole way promptly and cunningly down the village street his heart glowed within him at the thought of the long struggle which he had maintained against adversity, the insult over it his mind and all the successive harrowings and speculations and anxieties and cares which the end had brought to.

Yet in spite of every danger and difficulty it still held up its head with the last, and would weather the storm at least. He felt proudly that there was no other man in the city who would have had the dogged tenacity and the grim resolution which he had displayed during the last twelve months. "If ever any was should put it all in a book," he said to himself, "there are few who would believe it possible. It is not by my own strength that I have done it."

When he was half way to the Priory he met a small poor carriage which was rattling towards Bedsworth at a great pace, driven by a good-looking middle-aged lady with a small page by her side. The elegant gentleman was especially in a narrow country lane without a footpath, and as it approached him he could not help observing that the lady wore an fashion which was out of keeping with their general contour. Her forehead was concealed by a broad band of dark hair, but the lips were gathered into what might be described as a negative smile, and the head stood aside to let her pass. The lady in a sudden fit of her right hand rein brought the wheels across in so sudden a manner that they were within an ace of going over his toes. He only saved himself from a tumble into a deep ditch by a hedge. As it was, he found on looking down that his overgaiters were covered with flakes of wet mud. What made the incident the more provoking was the natural laughter of a lady shrieking from laughed very heartily at the ridiculous sight. The merchant proceeded on his way marvelling in his mind at the sudden crabbedness and hasty exclamations of transgressed human nature.

Had Mrs. Sally little dreamed of the urgency of the case. Had she seen the agitation which John Girdlestone had displayed, it is conceivable that she might have fled from the scene, and declared her guardian's anxiety that she should marry her cousin, her refusal, the sudden departure from London, her flight at the Priory, the manner in which she was all alone and in a strange place, and the reasons which made her leave her life. In attempt to make her story as clear as possible, she narrated the scene with Mr. Jorrocks and her sudden meeting, when her guardian had tempted her to compact with strangers. Indeed, Kate was so completely led from her story was that which had occurred the night before, for she felt that it might put too severe a tax upon Mrs. Sally's credulity. Indeed, Kate was not at all surprised at her ready belief in her story, for she felt that the lady would do, if she delayed longer the fresh night air had fires her retreat was available, and then how vain all regrets would be.

It seemed to her that there was very little risk in the matter. The girl had no communication with any one, for of those around her Mrs. Jorrocks was in her doings. Rebecca Taylorb was sleep and true, and Stevens knew nothing. Every one at the country side had seen the the invalid young lady at the Priory. Who would be prepared to hear that she had passed away? He dare not call in any local medical man, but his inventive brain had overcome the difficulty, and had hit upon a device by which he might deceive both doctors and coroner. If all went as he had planned it, it was difficult to see any chance of detection. In the case of a poorer man the fact that the girl's money reverted to him might arouse suspicion, but he rightly argued that with his great reputation he also would ever dream that such a consideration could have weight with him.

Having sent the magnum of oil and a taken a final look, John Girdlestone felt more at his ease. He was proud of his own energy in thinking out his whole way promptly and cunningly down the of all her troubles to the Widow Scully and had avowed that good woman's co-operation, a great weight seemed to have been lifted from her heart, and she sprang from the chaise a different woman. It could not be like a dream, all these events seem to be the grim old house. Within a day she was sure that either Tom or the corpse would be brought into combination with her. The thought made her so happy that the color stole back into her cheeks, and she sang for very lightness of heart as she made her way back to the Priory.

Mrs. Jorrocks and Rebecca observed the change which had come over her, and marvelled at it. Kate attempted to ask the former to her household work, but the old lady refused her assistance, and repeated her invitation. Her mind, too, amazed her greatly when she addressed her, and cried her in anything but a friendly manner. She amused herself that morning by rockcoming up to her and asking what the sponge of a person could be before she learnt how long it would be before Mr. Tom's friends. If Mrs. Scully had telegraphed news would have reached them last night. Probably she would write as well, giving all the particulars of the affair. The post came in about nine o'clock, she thought. Then some time would elapse before the major could find Tom. After that, no doubt they would have to consider what had best be done, and perhaps would go and consult with Mr. Dimsdale. This would occupy the whole morning and part of the afternoon. They could hardly reach the Priory before nightfall.

Time would be down by that time. On the morrow before he had arrived he was five and six. A great deal could be done in the interval of meeting the young merchant again. It was sweet to the natural instinct of a lady shrinking from character is rough and coarse and acting on Else had no conception of the impending danger, or of what his coming might portend.

Girdlestone was some practice to her this could be done without betraying the secret, or without giving the remotest ignorance of its force and meaning. Kate, when she was astonished to hear of her mess them, was astonished to hear of the change in his manner. His whole manner was less heavy and ungainly than it was before. He was more like a man who knew what he was about, and was doing something done to stop the preaching so near the cathedral. "He never mind," said the bishop, "she cannot hurt me. Let her preach, she must preach somebody, and, you see, she has no husband. I warrant your wife gives you more a good sermon in the retirement of your home. All women like to preach."—Cleveland Leader.

THE VOICE DIVINE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets."—Heb. i. 1.

HENRY F. COPE

revelation would give us light. We have been fainting for one voice that would speak with an authority transcending that given to our fathers. Revelation is not many at revelation, but the soul struggling in darkness, baffled by its problems, and in the night, still looks up and moaned. For what wants in breadth of the sweep of the vision of the universe are forever scattered, our questions forever unanswered, and as Gladstone said, "the human mind is not in the soul with interest." It is not strange that we should be tempted to the voice of the prophet, "Oh, that I knew where I might find Him!" Yet it would be strange if in a world of spirits there were no voice, no revelation of a spirit. If the fairest thought of our era is that which was given by Christ, it would be strange if there were no voice of such a father right back to his children. Such a world would remove all the spiritual from our life. Such a world would mean that man was better than his maker.

The divine voice speaks, but it is often fallen in the wrong direction, and falls not from the skies. It comes not in strange, unusual ways of vision and revelation. It is not speaking through the things of daily life. It is over rattling roofs and beats to the ear of every ear. It comes not from with but but springs up within, heard by the heart from the depths.

The best things have not dropped down; they have grown up from the earth, and within, but from within. God speaks not in thunders, but in the voice of a father to his children. Even the voice we hear in the sighings of the wind or the murmuring of the rivulet or the sort of setting sun must be in us before it means ought to us.

The two commandments owe their force not to the voice of thunder, but to their uttering on our hearts; to them the soul or man answers affirmatively. The voice of God speaks and follow is that which speaks with the authority of the commandments. Conscience is not mean that man is his own God, but that he knows in one higher than himself. It is meant that he has sense of spiritual development the law is being written on every heart.

Every real revelation is a divine revelation, since all truth is divine. Once we thought the scientific the energy of God, and we made our theologies and science lays bare one of the facts of the universe we do not look on science as the voice of God but infinite has written. When religious tights truth simply because truth is spoken as an infinitely tongue or falls to I speak her truth, she is fighting against God himself.

Our need is not some strange, are revelation of some unknown law in the midnight sky; our need is an ear trained to see and hear and an heart reverence the sublime voices that are now speaking in our world. We need not to look for nature, the joy of living, the stories of everyday divine beauty, the forces that are making a new world today as truly as ever one was made long ago.

The life of our day has not less of the divine than the life of long ago. The same message is in order to read; it is for an educated race; it is spiritual rather than material. It is addressed from within; it is found in every good impulse, in every outgoing sympathy, in the kindling of eye as friend greets friend, in the good that men are doing, in the inextinguishable that is becoming wider, the love stronger between man and man.

God speaks to men now as He spoke to Moses or to David, though the sense of our ears hear nothing. But the poor in spirit, those with whom pride of flesh were seen lingering under her spell, one of the vestrymen went to the bishop to remonstrate. He wanted something done to stop the preaching so near the cathedral. "Oh, never mind," said the bishop, "she cannot hurt me. Let her preach, she must preach somebody, and, you see, she has no husband. I warrant your wife gives you more a good sermon in the retirement of your home. All women like to preach."—Cleveland Leader.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

Invitation.

Come unto Me, when shadows darkly gather,
When the sad heart is weary and distressed,
Seeking for comfort from your heavenly Father,
Come unto me, and I will give you rest.

Large are the mansions in thy Father's dwelling,
Glad are the homes that sorrows never know;
Sweet are the harps in holy music swelling,
Soft are the tones which raise the heavenly hymn.

There, like an Eden blossoming in plenty,
Bloom the fair flowers the earth too soon decays;
Come unto Me, all ye who droop in sadness,
Come unto me, and I will give you rest.

time. It is at the basis of life, individually and collectively.

Lovelightness of character will outweigh ability and a clean life overturnsome brains. There never was a time when there was greater need than at present to bring down close to the life of the average man the ideals of integrity in action. The distressing discoveries that have revealed the lack of it in all walks of life have simply shown that too many of us are counterfeit with the host, and the lowest character itself may be regarded as a wail, for there is a kind of manhood that cries out for and the thirsts of integrity. Analyze character and you find it is the sum of small forces which moves through the avenues of thought, feeling, and action, and in the aggregate of life it may be expected of us. Only one force reigns supreme in the universe, and even the servers can tell us a glance what that force is. To me our universe is compared

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

A Power in Finance.

With the partial retirement of Thomas Fortune Ryan from active work in Wall street a new financial figure comes in the person of his son, Allan A. Ryan. Those years ago the elder Ryan began to divide himself of active direction of the many big corporations in which he was the originator and promoter, and now he is free to devote himself to other pursuits than the accumulation of wealth.

Of Mr. Ryan's five sons only Allan A. and John L. are said to inherit their father's business aptitude. At any rate they are the ones chosen to manage the vast fortune he has accumulated.

When Mr. Ryan gave over his interests to his sons, it is said, he informed the place of advice, which he received from the latest under whom ambitious he grew up.

"Young men," said the priest, "I want to give you a bit of fatherly advice." "I know what it is, pastor," replied the young scions of finance. The aged old king gay preached on often when I was a boy—the Bible and Poor Richard." "No, not that," said the Thomas. I know more of the world than do those sires. What I intended to say was, 'Don't write and forget nothing.'" Ryan never forgot his business.

Tipped the Earth.

Nothing gives such keen delight to Secretary of State Root as a sally at the expense of Secretary of War Taft in re-gard of the latter's great weight. It was Mr. Root who sent the famous cablegram to Mr. Taft in Manila asking after the health of the horse ridden by him on a two days' journey. At the national rivers and harbors congress, held while Mr. Taft was abroad, Secretary Root created great merriment during his speech by commenting:

"The center of gravity has shifted. Taft is on the other side of the world, you know."

Christian religion as revealed in the New Testament. With that we combine the best scientific help that is obtainable, specialists in neurology and in all other lines, for we require diagnosis of patients.

"We treat only one kind of disease, functional nervous disorders. Because of the American climate and the American manner of life these disorders are rapidly on the increase. Patients must be sent to us by physicians. Our work is absolutely free. We neither ask nor accept reward."

Every Day Has His Dog.

The family of Justice Day of the United States supreme court is a great lover of dogs. Every member has his own particular pet, and as the family is comparatively large the house is more or less overrun with animals. One day a friend of the justice said to him:

"Well, I have heard the old saying that every dog had his day, but I never expected my time to come when every Day had his dog."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Warts Have Worth.

Timber warts or burls, caused by the distortion of the grain out of its natural position, rank high in commercial value because of their rarity and beauty of figure. These freaks of nature have brought as high as 50 cents a pound, and a picture is shown of one that was valued at $250.—Popular Mechanics.

A Tip.

Never do any worrying today that can be put off till tomorrow.

HOME AND FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Hints For Cold Weather.

Do not allow the flue to become moist when out in the cold, or they will crack. If a well is worn and the lentels dampens the room, may it good by every now and then with a hunker-chief.

Do not pass too long at the snow when it glitters in the sunshine, for it not only burns the eyelids, but blurs the forehead and makes a frown.

Do not sit down out of doors to rest when lee-sailing. Rate slowly with the wind bustend.

When chilled after a cold ride or walk, drink a glass of hot water, milk or hot lemonade; remove the shoes and stockings and rub the feet vigorously with a warm, rough towel; we not put them near a fire until the circulation has been restored or chilblains will result; rub cold cream in well, and after removing the greater part with a towel or stocking, it will not chapped and soften the skin after Jack Frost has been at work.

To Thaw Frozen Pipes.

When pipes burst or freeze during intensely cold weather they may be thawed by spreading on a piece of cloth a thick layer of unslaked lime, tying the cloth around the frozen pipe and throwing water over it. The heat produced by combining the water and lime is sufficient to thaw the pipes. This is especially good in vertical pipes, on which it is usually difficult to apply external heat.—Good Housekeeping.

To Clean Plumes.

A good way to clean ostrich plumes, white or colored, easily is by soaking them awhile in warm, clean water, brave them lightly through the hand a few times and blow them dry. Put water and dry by shaking over the stove. Last recent them by drawing each little barb over the dull edge of a knife or scissors.

Thief Proof Hand Bag.

Pickpockets will be up against a hard problem when they tackle a woman with a pocketbook equipped with the latest lock beneath shown, the invention of a Pennsylvania man. This novel and useful mechanism has been adopted in connection with a clip on bags of any value and any type on form of bag, valise or other portable receptacle. There is no possibility of the bag being opened without the knowledge of the person carrying it. The handle is in two sections, which are hollow and have locking latches operating in connection with a catch in the interior of the bag. To open the bag the outer hollow portion of the handle must be pushed back releasing the latches. The bag is then opened in the usual way. Obviously it would be impossible to open the bag without removing the lock from the handle. Naturally pickpockets could not open the bag without a clue.

MOVABLE HANDLE LOCKS BAG.

Shells Remove Clinkers.

When the fire brisks up or becomes covered with cinders which have fused and adhere they may be cleaned by throwing over or on a shovel full of the fire hot while the fire is hot and then shaking the fire in a yard. The clinkers will then cleave off easily. Salt sprinkled on in the same way also will loosen them.

Camphorated Oil.

This is splendid for cuts, bruises, sore throat, tonsils and many ailments. Put a pint of kerosene in a quart bottle and fill the rest with olive or cottonseed oil and shake until a cample is taken up by the oil. To an ounce of this add a half pint of sweet oil—about 5 cents worth of camphorene. Shake vigorously before using.

Kentucky Potatoes.

Pare and slice thin six large potatoes, as for frying. Throw in cold water for half an hour, then remove from the water, wipe dry and put them in a shallow baking pan. Pour over them a cupful of milk seasoned with salt and pepper. Bake an hour; then pour over them half an ounce of butter and serve very hot.

Save Time in Ironing.

Take a pail of warm water and a chem which boons to the yard when the clean clothes are dry upon the line. Before taking the clothes down spin, Kin, remove from the line, roll and lay in the basket. The clothes then are ready for ironing with but one unbending.

Scouring Mixture.

One-half pound of soft soap, one-half pound of sandi and one-fourth pound of air slaked lime mixed to a paste. Use a little on scrub and scour in sink, and your kitchen table at all floor can be kept spotlessly clean as white.

A Heroic Poem.

There is no heroic poem in the world but is at bottom a biography of the life of a man; also it can be at, there is no life of a man, faithfully recorded, but is a heroic poem or else, the just or unhonored.—Thomas Carlyle.

Must Report Lockjaw Cases.

The Massachusetts state board of health has placed tetanus, commonly called lockjaw, in the list of diseases that physicians are required to report.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

When to Breed Ewes.

Ewes should breed to be bred under one year of age, and in lambing a flock to begin with this is as good an age as any to get them. One may have trouble, however, in getting ewes of this age, as most ewes like to keep their young ewes and sell off their old ones. As with other classes of live stock, younger ewes and dams usually give stronger and more vigorous offspring than do those bred for the first time, but the difference is not great. In fact, females thoroughly matured, bred in good ewes, give just as good results as their younger mates. And this is as true with sheep as with other animals. Ewes from yearlings up to four years give the best results. When they get much over that it is a good plan to sell them and let the other fellow take the risk of having old, toothless ewes on his hands.—Farm Progress.

Feed For Young Pigs.

The growth of an animal the more unusual matter it requires in its food, says Farm Progress. When very young pigs are growing they are producing bone very rapidly in proportion to size and consequently require more phosphates in their food, especially if fine is a suitable consideration. Milk contains all the necessary substances for pigs, but after a time they be some of earth ate to be unable to consume enough milk to supply them as they must drink about eight times as much water in the milk as there are solids. To supply this deficiency water must be added, but cornmeal is deficient in mineral matter. Bran, ground oats, middlings and finely ground clover hay (scalded) in addition to the milk and cornmeal will prove advantageous.

Reseeding Meadows.

Permanent meadows and pastures often are benefited by reseeding. Meadows most produce weeds because there is to grass plant to occupy the grass. If there are any thin bare spots, it pays to sow a mixture of timothy, timothy, redtop, etc, on the land in the early spring. A sharp spike tooth harrow can be used to scarify before and after the seeding does a lot of good. A light dressing of manure and lime per ton per acre put on with a spreader—gives greater returns than being plowed down for corn, as is the usual practice. A heavy seed is a sure foundation of grass. Timothy and red top for little attention to securing it.—Live Agre in National Stockman.

Wounded Trees.

The following mixture is recommended for wounds of any kind on trees. Melt resin and warm a little crude petroleum in separate vessels, pouring into a third vessel three parts resin to one of petroleum. This makes the wounds very effectively until grown over.

It is solid not to run in warm weather cracks in cold, and cuts covered with it will not fall to heal satisfactorily. It is much cheaper than paint. If a flash is broken it should be cut back smoothly to its parent trunk or branch and the cut covered with the preparation. It is also good to apply to wounds of the bark or trunk of trees by rodents.

Whey For Pigs.

Results of experiments at Danish experiment stations show that twelve pounds of whey from separator skimmilk cheese are equal to one pound of grain for pig feeding or one pound of skimmilk equals two pounds of whey in feeding value. Experiments at the Wisconsin station show a higher feeding value for whey, as it contains more fat and casein than that used above. As a nitrogenous food may be used instead of a similar quantity of grain, or as a supplement to other nitrogenous foods, it is a valuable feed for pigs.

Day's Ration For Sheep.

A day's ration for a sheep is estimated at two pounds of hay, half a pound of bran and half a pound of ground oats when there is no pasture, but as fodder sheep consume more than smaller ones the estimated ration may not be strictly correct. Sheep should be supplied with succulent food, salted cereals being highly relished. They should not be overfed, but should be kept in moderate condition. In minimum good pasture is sufficient.

Silage a Valuable Food.

At a recent extensive feeding experiment of steers carried on by the Kansas Agricultural college it was demonstrated that it cost almost seven times as much to make a pound of gain when hay was fed as when silage was fed for roughage and almost six times as much when corn stover was fed as when silage or tops and stover were fed. The facts are not yet worth thinking over and that very carefully.—Farm Progress.

Grain Stuff For Poultry.

Every thoughtful poultry owner provides some grain stuff for the hens in winter. If you have a silo, give them some ensilage. If not, give cabbage or mangels or some other root. Cut the roots in half and split them. It is great egg making food. A defaulti of any of these things apples are good or turnips and pumpkin raw or cooked.

Feeding the Hens.

Corn, wheat, oats, barley, vegetables, small potatoes, apple scraps, meat meal, if wet, given in proper proportion and accompanied by a dry mash for all. Oil, pine water, charcoal and dust in, is should result in a good supply of eggs if other conditions are favorable.

Too Many Unreal Wants.

We are ruined not by what we really want, but by what we think we do; therefore, never go abroad in search of your wants; if they be real ones, they will come home in search of you, for be that boys what he does not want will soon want what he cannot buy.—C. Coldbert Hall.

Robson says American sporting writers formed the habit of calling Hawker Joe Bowler, but that his correct name is Joe Hawker.

Erne Teaching Parisians to Box.

Having shown so marked an improvement in athletic sports, the French now intend to reach out for honors in that peculiarly Anglo-Saxon game wherein the pudgies gave unto the squared circle force the main contestants (equal the Russian Bear and skull. Frank Erne, who at one time was American high weight champion, is teaching the art of "soup, hook and uppercut" to Parisians, and he expects to take to the game like a duck to water.

The champion says he has some pretty good champlonship class, and he is for wonder more of gamble he expects them to go out after scalps. When they do, declares Erne, they will be the English and American fighter men sit up and take notice.

It will be some day, he says, if a French champion pugilist, after all, why not? We have had a French champion in fencing wrestling champion, Belgian rowing champions, and, come to think of it, a proper French champion lacking champion, is a French-Canadian with the name of Lacoste.

King Edward Has Great Two-year-old.

Commenting on the two-year-olds in King Edward's stable one season, an English sport says: "Of the two-year-olds Perrier will, unless I am much mistaken, turn out by far the best. He is framed on grand lines and has all the good points of a race horse without being of quite the same handsome appearance as his sire, Perrier was the sire of Sunstar in Amphora. Too big to be trained on the hard ground during the summer, he was still backward when late in the autumn he made his mark only appearance in public in the Dewhurst Plate, and, although beaten by Phosion, he ran so well and finished with such decided determination that the hope is justified that he has only to make ordinary improvement to be capable of taking high rank among the best of the aristocrats of classic honors this season, a consummation devoutly to be hoped for."

Miss Sutton Won't Travel.

Miss May Sutton, women tennis champion, will not go to England this year. She declares that if the defeated English not stars desire to win back their honors they must come to the United States to get the chance. It is now a question as to whether the British women are as game as Miss Sutton, and whether they will come to this country.

CARTER TO SEEK ARMY RANK.

Former Captain Will Act Following Vindication by Court.

Hiram M. Carter, former captain of engineers in the United States army, as a result of his exoneration on the St. Mihiel bridge graft charges, gives hope in a dubious hinted sheet by Judge Advocate Ansell that he will seek the restoration of his army position. Despite his long years in prison and his seeming fight for right liberty in the eyes of the world, Carter declared that he found himself at 52 still a young man and ready to begin life work again. While admitting that reinstatement to his rank in the army is what he most desires, he is also considering other commercial positions which have been offered him, especially one of them at a yearly salary of $15,000. The Carter case probably attracted more attention than any of its kind in the annals of the army. Great interest was aroused by the fact that because of the high standing (position—$5,000,000) he possessed, Carter, if any one prisoner had pull in the army and New York and northern society—he. He is declared to be the holder of the most brilliant record ever made at West Point and at the time he was downfall he was military adviser to a part of the Russian army and a member of the Nonpartisan Council commission. Carter is now living with his brother, Dr. L. S. Carter, in Chicago.

CHURCH CHOIR AVERTS PANIC.

Chandelier Falls, Safe Sanctuary on Fire and Alarms 200 Worshipers.

Falling fifteen feet into the aisle of the Epworth Reformed church in Muskegon, Mich., a central chandelier, studded with wondering lamps, fell with a crash and closing loudly at Sunday night's service on Sunday afternoon and caused a panic in a verge of rushing for the exits by a large flock of the church. Only the efforts of A. S. Brook, continued singing as though nothing unusual had happened and the confusion of those on the platform quieted the fears of the congregation. Some of the members of the choir, for to be left put in the central aisle, but the blaze was quickly smothered by the ushers.

1,200,000 IDLE MEN THROUGHOUT COUNTRY

Figures Show New York in the Lead with 250,000 Out of Work.

90,000 IS CHICAGO ESTIMATE.

Union Labor Leader Boasts Members Are Not in Want, though Without Jobs.

In a summary of the country's conditions the report shows that 1,200,000 men have been removed from normal industrial centers and reported as idle. Chicago, and implies that a number of than more than one million men are seeking jobs. The report shows that 90,000 are unemployed in the city of Chicago and that 50,000 are in Detroit, Mich., the cities.

Following are subjoined:

In the cities—
Chicago	14,000
Little Rock	1,000
Bridgeport	1,000
Hartford	1,000
Wilmington	1,000
Jacksonville	1,000
Springfield	1,000
Gary	1,000
Fall River	1,000
Lowell	1,000
Lawrence	1,000
Brockton	1,000
Trenton	1,000
Paterson	1,000
Philadelphia	1,000
Pittsburgh	1,000
Scranton	1,000
Providence	1,000
Milwaukee	1,000
Total	41,000

No distinct figure could be obtained from the report for some of the cities in the formation the number of idle in the States was found to be:

Alabama	10,000
Arizona	10,000
Colorado	10,000
Connecticut	10,000
Illinois	50,000
Iowa	10,000
Kansas	10,000
Maine	10,000
Massachusetts	100,000
Missouri	10,000
Montana	10,000
Nebraska	10,000
New Jersey	100,000
Rhode Island	10,000
Tennessee	10,000
Texas	10,000
Utah	10,000
Vermont	10,000
Virginia	10,000
West Virginia	10,000
Total	390,000

That there are more unemployed men and women in New York City today than at any previous time in many years past is the belief of union leaders, charity workers and students of social conditions. The Federation of the number out of work were from 250,000 to 300,000. It is probable that half of the latter number or 250,000 is about correct.

The following estimate is given by responsible labor leaders:

Boston	10,000
Buffalo	5,000
Cleveland	8,000
Detroit	50,000
Lakewood	20,000
Pittsburgh	10,000
Cincinnati	10,000
Skilled workers	2,000
Bricklayers	2,000
Carpenters	2,000
Electricians	2,000
Engineers	2,000
Painters	2,000
Plumbers	2,000
Sheet metal workers	2,000
Structural workers	2,000
Presses	2,000
Miscellaneous trades	2,000
Total	200,000

Secretary Doherty of the general association board of the Building trades, making with pride when counting up the number of men absent of desultatory among union men, doubt the fact that at least half of them are out of work at present.

TEACHERS WHO DIED IN BOSTON'S SCHOOL TRAGEDY

MISS WEED. MISS HARDER.

Deep are the pictures of the principals in the recent terrible tragedy at the Epiphany Lawrence School for Girls in Boston. Miss Weed, the singer and soloist, and Miss Harder had been friends for years, were classmates at Wellesley College, and were joint founders of Lawrence school. Miss Weed had resigned from a position, where she had been for months suffering from collapse from overwork. When she thought she was to be taken back she shot her friend and then herself.

PEACE OR WAR—THEY ALWAYS COME HERE.

PREDICTS A FAILURE.

Former Chief Engineer Stevens Says Panama Canal Will Not Help.

John F. Stevens, a vice-president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, and a former chief engineer of the Panama canal, has issued a statement predicting the failure of the canal undertaking. Mr. Stevens says that the canal will not help the United States to its trade with South America, or, as operated, will be operated all of the United States. The Panama canal is given no chance to compete with the Atlantic and then ship to the east by the canal to reach India.

Mr. Stevens also says that in our commercial relations with the islands of the Pacific and Far East the canal will be of little value. Our coal and wheat centres are inland. Their proximity have to be started on their way by rail. When once loaded on cars it would not be cheaper to ship to the Atlantic and then ship to the east by the canal than to continue it would be to send directly to the ports on our Pacific coast and then get on board ship. Mr. Stevens believes that our coal supply is fast diminishing and that within the next generation the future, Siberia, he says, will be the wheat country of the future, with India a close second.

Mr. Stevens outlining that the Panama canal cannot hope to compete with other than an expense. It will not cost expenses and it will cost more than is expected. It will be an adventure, he says, to European countries, but not for us. The canal is the finishing of the animal for his class at January, 1918.

The idea of the canal being of great value to us in times of war is wrong and naval forces can be quickly sent from one coast to the other, he says, is utterly absurd. It would take days for the ships to get around, and during that time hostile shells could have destroyed the canal.

WILL FEED THE HUNGRY.

Fashionable Fifth-Ave. Congregation Forms Unique Club.

On a recent Sunday in the Second Presbyterian church, one of the most fashionable in Pittsburg, was organized what is known as the Breakfast Brotherhood Club. The organization consists of men and women enlisted in a good but certainly most original cause. Each Sunday morning before services transferred will be served in the basement of the edifice to the poor and needy. Word was scattered, perhaps more as a joke than anything else, for members connected with the church that these would be free breakfasts Sunday in the vestibule, served to all who were hungry. Two hundred people were so touched at the church door when the pastor, S. Edward Young, arrived. He was completely forced for a moment, not having heard of the "brotherhood movement." and when he learned the reason for the gathering he met the situation calmly and at once prevailed upon the congregation who had assembled to go home and get their usual breakfast and coffee made, and the organizer pastor personally helped back after the waste of the hungry 200 then thinking the subject over he and his people came to the conclusion that they could not and then get on board Sunday morning wouldn't be a hard or unpleasant task, and so the club was formed.

FIRE TRAPS EVERYWHERE.

Every Village and City Has Its Potential Collinwood Tragedy.

That New York city is full of fire traps and that every village and city possesses the possibilities of just such a calamity as visited Collinwood, Ohio, is the opinion of Richard L. Humphrey, engineer in charge of the structural materials laboratory of the United States government, he says:

"The shocking catastrophe at Collinwood did not result from exceptional conditions but from conditions that are to be found in thousands of instances throughout the United States. The same or even worse dangers prevail in every village and town and, indeed, in many of the large cities. Even where municipal laws are supposed to govern the erection of such structures the conditions are often worse than in Collinwood. The only surprise is that these catastrophes do not occur more frequently.

"The remedies for these conditions lie in elaborate systems for fighting fire or any elaborate fire drills, which may or may not be effectively carried out. In the case of school buildings municipal laws compelling the erection of fireproof structures of fireproof with materials of the highest quality, and especially in the prevention of the crowding of living structures, where women and children gather in large number, for, for instance, theaters, hospitals and similar buildings. Unless such action is taken greater catastrophes than those at Collinwood and Hoppertown, attended by even greater loss of life, will inevitably occur."

Low Wages Inevitable.

Henry Clews, the New York banker and broker, addressing the Pittsburg chapter of the Association of Industrial Engineers said that a general reduction of wages in the near future is inevitable and that it will become absolutely necessary because of the high figures at which they were pushed during the long period of war. He said the labor unions should at once realize that their wage rates must be cut and that they are forced to yield." He pointed out that half a half a hour from now, and argued that the workmen could this charitable acceptance, and go on a day to society at large. Mr. Clews defended such speculation on the exchanges, saying that it "is not a gambling than speculating in real estate or ordinary merchandise." He deplored the recent attacks on Wall Street as the financial center of the country, by both Hoover and Bryan.

THE RAILROADS

Bryan's Nebraska Platform.

The Nebraska Democratic platform adopted at Lincoln was received by Mr. Bryan and he believed to have been written to him. In its pompous state ment it recalls the Kansas platform in the impudently of its bulbarous it certainly has the ring of a platform of Wilson. Hence it may be set down as the Bryan program.

It contains, of course, all of Mr. Bryan's old hobbies such as the "direct election of Senators by popular vote," and it offers the supposed suggestion that the way to "bust the trusts" is to "enforce the law against anything manufactured by a joint stock company.

Mr. Bryan's usual "cure" for the high cost of living is to "bust the trusts" is to "put out the rope." This remedy is followed by a joint stock company.

It also consists, of course, the bunk of the war in the Philippines and the abandonment of that American possession. It also is forceful, in phrase when every other nation is getting away from academic "free trade" and "free seas" and "free ocean" as a unilateral condition toward which we should strive.

The platform clearly declares for a national income tax and a national inheritance tax, but for revenue but to "reach 'swollen fortunes.'" It does not even pretend that a large revenue is to come in should. It openly presents these "taxes" as a method of taking money from the men who are supposed to have "too much."

It goes to the full limit of static socialism with respect to regulation of commerce and of the "public utilities." The right of Congress to prescribe complete control over interstate commerce is asserted and the states are to exercise just as complete control over commerce within its borders.

It would have us all live at all times under the shadow of governmental inquisition and espionage.

In brief, the Bryan platform invites us to go back to put our necks under the yoke of unit rule and upon our bodies the strait-jacket of state socialism. It would have us suffer for our sounds the hate of the dog that has bitten it.

It presumes to keep on doing to unpatriotic and more outlandish—exactly what has been done to us for the last three or four years, and what has brought us to our present distress.

We want more of the dose we have had for the last six months. For some and free Americans there can be but one answer: We do not.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The Thaw Surplus.

Congress is now busy barging on the treasury surplus as one of the causes of the high cost of living. It is a great step to think that because of this very surplus the government is able to put out billions of currency to the relief of banks which would otherwise be in the hands of public property. This is opposed to the pet scheme of Tom Johnson, who is seeking to compel for a bill now before the legislature the purpose of which is to put the whole community in debt. Once a week, sometimes oftener, the major sent hurry of Cleveland, Ohio, and Tom Johnson, up for a two days' event and then took them out solemnly into the country.

"As often as the column went out on scout as often did it return, a day or two later, usually equipped with the news of the country roads, the horses looking jaded and uncertain. If they ever brought back a prisoner that fact was kept concealed by us.

"Each of these scouts the column had an experience that was not down in the major's tactics. The bushwhackers, who always knew of the coming of the column and retreated, concluded to give him a surprise.

The column had halted at the end of its first day's ride and was lounging in a corn field. The camp fires had been lighted and the air was redolent with the odor of smoke soon. The bugles had sounded for the serving of rations. Even the pickets had come in and were at ease.

"Without warning the bushwhackers rose up out of the bushes alongside and fired a volley into the unsuspicious crowd, they swept down upon Major Bergen's camp fire and captured it. The colonel of the bushwhackers, a former school teacher, took his staff apparent nonchalantly, as the major reported it to his superior officer, before the major's shock and disturbed his composure.

"The colonel asked the major and begged his pardon for the intrusion. He said he and his men had not come to fight, but they were almost hungry, and the odor of the smoke soup had made them frantic.

"If permitted to have their fill they would retire in good order and the major could do likewise. If the major wanted fight, he could have it, but they were not there with any hostile intent or any other than those mentioned.

"The major was literally a prisoner. The substantial grandeur and assured the colonel and his staff to be his guests in a short time. It is definitely known that the Mitsu Maru carried forty-three sailors and 241 passengers and nearly all of these perished.

The scene of the collision was within a few miles of the reef on which the Dakota, one of the biggest of the American-owned Pacific liners, was wrecked a year ago. It is in a dangerous and difficult part of the Hokkaido strait, near the city of Hakodate, and just south of the northernmost of the Japanese group of islands.

According to advices from Hokkaido, the passengers were all asleep when the crash came, and terrible scenes of panic ensued. The Mitsu Maru was equipped with life boats and were prepared for immediate. Owing to the darkness and the wild panic among the passengers however, little could be done. The Hokkaido, though herself badly damaged, stood by and sent boats to save what survivors she could, but the status sank within two minutes after the collision.

The Hokkaido's boats rescued about 200 of the Mitsu Maru's crew and passengers.

by and gave what help could be given. Wherever naval authorities at Hakodate were alerted, they dispatched several fast destroyers at top speed for the scene of the wreck, in hope of finding survivors. The Hokkaido was badly damaged, but as one is believed to have been lost with the Mitsu Maru, the ship and all the members of the crew are Japanese.

A number of rich Japanese merchants are thought to have been on board the wrecked steamer.

Fifty Years in Lighthouse.

Miss Ida Lewis, the only woman in charge of an American lighthouse, and who has been at Lime Rock lighthouse, in Newport, R. I., harbor, for over fifty years, is thinking seriously of retiring. When she considers the fact that for fifty long years she has enjoyed a night away from her lonely post, she will be sure that the circumstances will be quite a sufficient undertaking. She has saved twenty persons and lost a sleep. Last fall she received from the Humane Cross of Honor Society at Washington its cross of honor and medal, which is the only one in the United States authorized to receive such an honor.

Since then Miss Lewis has received a pension from the Carnegie hero fund for saving life from the sea, and has received $1,000 from the Rockefeller foundation for the same reason. Her brother, Rudolph Lewis, is caring for the lighthouse.

Political Comment

Business in the Presidential Year. Presumably, the year of a national election is a clear open money of the activities of the people. Yet this year is due rather in moral than material causes, and is allowed some exception and pounds caution in current transactions. In many of the things that go to make up business conditions a presidential contest has no actual effect whatever. It is not responsible for the weather, nor the crops, nor the world's ills of commerce, nor the progress of the war, nor the outbreak of wars. Yet, together, therefore is a how for the disposition to take in hill is warranted by the risks ahead, considered without reference to what is merely haughty. In the next four years there can be no comparison between crude conditions of Washington. The senate, in any case, will have a Republican majority and a most likely. This only is certain. So the fear of an overwhelming political reversion of the senate is baseless. The most that could be done by a sweeping Democratic victory in November and would be in but the initiation for a long time, except in matters on which both parties should agree. Another point of importance to keep in mind is that the Republican party will continue to control the executive of the government for four months after the adjournment of the next Congress and House. The present Congress and executive should be at the best of relations and the immediate day arrived. Between the first Monday in December and March 4 is a period largely Republican in both branches could put matters in shape for the incoming Democrats, if the opposing Republican policies cannot be altered without disadvantage to the country. Business obtains full control, and there is little prospect that it will be upset by the mere fact of election. In all probability the next House and President will be Democratic, and the Senate Republican. Business will require power to act, as far ten years past. Business of one entirely disposed, nor can the laws I have passed be nullified during the next four years without the consent of the Senate. Nothing startlingly radical can happen in the next two years. Business can go on this point, which rests on certainties to a greater extent than the timid supposes.

But there has been a financial story some will say. This is true, though the country is still somewhat disturbed. One reason was a shortage of currency. It is a sudden reversion from dealing with this matter, and it is not conceivable that the Congress will pass a measure of relief. The Bryan line been attended with some results. Gold is held by the treasury, the largest total ever obtained. Gold is drawn with ease. Money is tightening up the amount in the possession of the government. The two Congressional imports by more than $100,000,000 a month; another record exhibit. The crop outlook is favorable. In this great country a general crop failure is unknown. Generally speaking, farmers are better able than formerly to deal with adverse features of the season. Wheat and manufactures are at the highest point. The real estate situation is favorable. Building is at a low ebb, but there is no reason why it should not be revived. Business is in a good condition, and the outlook is favorable.

Ohio Republican Platform. Many new editions and with the abolishment of matters referring exclusively to state affairs, they published by the Republicans at Columbus, Ohio, Wednesday, Words claimed to be framed to express a stronger indorsement of the President and of his policies than is contained in the this pronouncement, increase is made to these policies, including such ideas which have already been put in effective operation, such as the rate bill, and for the legal enactment of which all the energies of the administration are bent, such as the employers' liability law, a greater navy and merchant marine, an expansive system of internal waterway improvements and a national board of health.

The tariff is disposed of in a sentence, which is a commonplace demand for revision by the next Congress assembled for that purpose on a purely protective basis. The tariff is not around the interests of the producers, farmers, wage earners and manufacturers and many unprofitable values have been turned into rich grain and fruit fields.

Civil War Stories

A Southern-made story or an adventure during the Civil War, in which the heroes were not more than a youngest only 10 years old. A lad of about was hidden under the Sense of their mother's barn, about twelve miles northwest from Hillsboro, and the boys volunteered to go and get it. It was in August, 1862. They started with a wagon and two good mules, approached the farm from the south, and made a detour over ditches and through fences because they did not dare to go by the regular road. The Federals were encamped about two miles east.

We reached the barn safely, having been seen, and driving into a shed attached to the building, unveiled in loading the goods and secured the sacks by winding them tightly over the top, to the high sides of the wagon.

To reach Hillsboro road we had to drive a little sight of the Yankee camp. At this point the road turned at right angles toward the south. We had just topes round the sales next the shed, so as to keep the "chaps" of the wheels, and as reached this turn without being seen, but had traveled only a short distance on the old station road when we found that we had been discovered, and could see a party of horsemen coming off or us at a rapid pace.

My cousin, who was an expert driver, although so young, told me to hold on tight while he manoeuvred the near mule, and then commenced the race of our lives.

For some distance the road was perfectly, and at the rate we were going, it was easy for the most dexterous movements and lightest grip that I could stay on the wagon. I was compelled to give up on it. At that time I fired only a few shots, but soon a sore and bruised feeling came on all round me, and sent the wheel dying bits my face. My coat and hat were torn to ribbons.

It seemed that a few moments would quickly settle the matter. I shall never forget the yells of those Yankees, so different from the usual Northern yell of the bullets as they came faster and faster; but strange to say, not a bullet struck any of the horses.

At a sharp turn in the road, a blind road led off into the woods, and as we were driving on the side of the road in the grass, Paul took this chance, and quietly slipped off the wagon the tight-bush huckleberry grew rank and thick. We were now out of range of the Federal guns, but we did not slacken our pace. Grazing a tree here and missing one there, we dashed on over logs, through hollows and up hill until we felt sure that our pursuers had lost sight of the main road.

We were congratulating ourselves when "Hurt" brought us to a stop and a soldier, with gun ready, demanded, "Who goes there?"

I answered, "A friend." Then came the order, "Advance and give the countersign."

It was now dusk, and we could see that the officer was a Federal picket; but as we came nearer, I saw my cousin was preparing to crush to risk the words with which we had been furnished for the occasion, "H. E. Lee."

"You can pass," the sentry said.

Just a short time before this we had passed a detachment of men who were in charge of the road that we had left, but we were surprised to see a party of Yankees come filed up as prisoners when we reached headquarters. Time and these were the same men from which we had run them into. We were glad indeed to reach the county fire in sight of our home, and the next day about 10 o'clock arrived in Richmond, with a load of provisions, safe in the wheat.

Old Richmond never looked more beautiful, nor could there have been two more thankful boys. We enjoyed a change to wheat bread, which was 10 cents, after months of nothing but corn bread.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

Council Room, March 23, '08

At a regular meeting of the common council of the City of Charlevoix held on the 23rd day of March, 1908.

Mayor Cameron presided. Aldermen present: Wilmot, Cameron, Fowler, Webster and Ward.

Minutes of March 16th read and approved.

The committee on Streets, Sidewalks and Swing Bridge made the following report

To the Mayor and Common Council of the City of Charlevoix.

Your committee on streets, sidewalks, and swing bridge to whom the matter of the appointment of a street commissioner and of the bridge tender, and other matters pertaining to the employment of men for the ensuing year, respectfully recommends, report as follows:

We believe that the employment of the bridge tender should be a great deal closer to the city and that the city should have the control of the bridge.

That the council can, for the construction and upkeep of the bridge, and the employment of the bridge tender, save the Township of Charlevoix $100 and at least the City of Charlevoix $100 and at least the City of Charlevoix be relieved to great extent from the bridge tender's salary, the Township of Charlevoix should be relieved of one half of such salary and be charged by our bridge tender accordingly.

That the bridge tender be hired by the Township of Charlevoix, Atkins's part time for the Township, for the balance of his time, and when the Township hires a price of Three Dollars per day for a team and driver, the City of Charlevoix should pay the balance of the expense.

Your committee would recommend that the bridge tender be hired by the City of Charlevoix at a price of Three Dollars per day, and that the balance of the time, the Township of Charlevoix should be charged with the expense.

Your committee would recommend that the Township of Charlevoix be charged with one half of the expense of the street commissioner, and that the balance of the time the City of Charlevoix should be charged with the expense.

She sent them one account and had from some other lady in London. She felt no interests against him now—no feeling of hatred—only sad effort to hide all his peculiarities. He was in a very bad humor on account of domestic difficulties. His wife had been shooting him, and had called for something him. Mrs. Lecksmith, who was a very good-hearted woman, and had a great deal of the nature and ethics of her sex, had taken the matter into her own hands, and had sent for a doctor and a nurse.

She went out on to the little lawn which lay in front of should house. There were some flower beds scattered about on it, but they were overgrown with weeds and in the last stage of neglect. She seemed herself to attempting to improve the condition of one of them, and kneel down beside it she called up a mass of the weeds which covered it. There was a withered rose bush in the center, and she was trying to clear it, and surrounded it by a little edge of pebbles, and surrounded it in amazing some degree of order and neatness which it had lost. She worked with unusual energy, pausing from time to time to wipe the sweat off her forehead or to listen intently to any noise sound which might catch her ear.

In the course of her work she chanced to look up at the window of Mr. Girdlestone's bedroom, and she saw the face of her husband looking down at her. The Girdlestones were nodding their heads, as though they were nodding to her in the third man, who stood between them. He was looking at her with a peculiar expression on his face. Kate thought as she met his gaze that he looked more like a fiend than ever. Her heart fell. He was flushed and haggard, with little fire in his eyes, and a look of cunning in them. They all, when they saw that she noticed them, ceased nodding and looking at the window. She bent again to her work, and they, as she thought, resumed their talk. The strange, fierce, red one, and the tall, pale one, with the long black beard, seemed evidently impressed upon her mind.

Girdlestone had been so pleased at the early appearance of his two allies, and the prospect of settling the matter forever and all, that he recovered then with a cordial alacrity which was very pleasant to see. "Alive, parentally, my dear, son, and alive, I hope, and well, and not, as yet, is a model to our young business men," said he, as he shook his son's hand, and was delighted to see you at the Priory, and hope that you will remain with us for some days."

"Pah! it smells of carbolic," said Kirn, aloud. "Hurt you I have had no touch-you-not-by-me."

"I am quite stunned," the other groaned, throwing himself into a chair. "You had been carried in here, and I thought the sun, dazzled by the sun, and I was now sober and in my senses, and I thought I was with those cursed ones."

"Mr. Jeremiah, who had the child. Kate imagined it was a poor child, and they died day?"

"Yes, sure. Mamma, she told me to go home and never to come again. I saw your face and I knew it was all over."

"Yes, sure. Not at all," Kate answered, smiling. "Mamma, she felt for that my grandam has been much kinder to day, and full of happy news. Give her my warmest thanks for her kindness."

"All right, sure. Now, then, take me to the gate home! I feel giving you no check, as you know, I am a fiend."

"No, no, John."

John looked at her scrupulously. "If he hasn't it's all right," he said. "But I think on a day of such good fortune I had the pleasure of you can help it." He opened his hand and showed a gold-plated ring, which he carried. "I'd be knocked his other proper sort with this," he said, "blowed if I wouldn't."

"Don't do anything of the sort, John, but, on that account, I will go home."

"All right, sure. Good by to you."

Kate watched him afraid down the lane. He passed at the bottom as if irresolute, and then she saw him relent and turn back, the stone over into a turnip field, and with carefully off in the opposite direction to the Priory gates.

CHAPTER XX.

Late in the afternoon Kate arrived at the Priory. From one of the passage windows Kate saw him driving up the avenue in a high dogcart. There was a broad-shouldered, red-bearded man sitting beside him, and the author from the Pipkin Hill was presented behind. Kate had rushed in the office on hearing the sound of wheels, with some dim expectation that her friends had come sooner than she anticipated. A glance, however, showed her that the huge arrow was fixed behind a curtain she watched them alight and come into the house, while the trap stood at rest round and rubbed off for Bedworth again.

She went slowly back to her room, wondering what friend this could be whom Mr. Jeremiah had brought with him. She had not expected that he was roughly clad, presumably in contrast to the dandy of a very different sort. Kate was vaguely sorry for his attire. Poor dear! It was thought by the Priory, since they had let the trap go back to the village. She was glad that he had come, for his presence would act as a restraint upon the Girdlestones.

As the long afternoon stole away she became more and more impatient and apprehensive. She had been sealing in her room, for she feared that she might no longer keep her attention on the stitches, she peered cautiously up and down the passage, and listened in the room beneath she could hear the dull muffled sound of steps, voices in a long continuous monotone, voices only in the interpretive now and again of one voice which was so deep and loud that it resembled her of the growl of a beast of prey. This must indeed be the red-bearded stranger. Kate wondered what it could be that they were talking over so earnestly. City affairs, no doubt, or other business matters of importance. She remembered having once heard it remarked that many of the richest men on Change were eccentric and slovenly in their dress, so the newcomer might be a very important person than he seemed.

She had discovered the results of her room all the afternoon to avoid Kirn, but her curiosity was so great that she felt feverish and hot. The fresh air, she thought, would do her good. So she slipped down the staircase, treading as lightly as possible, and to the hall the gentlemen in her relectory. Kate appeared to hear her, however, for the door of conversation ceased at once, and there was a dead silence until after she had gone by.

Kate appeared to hear her, however, for the door of conversation ceased at once, and there was a dead silence until after she had gone by.

"Hi! I'll pay him for that," the navvy growled sullenly.

"A human life, Mr. Hurt," continued Ellsbourne, "is a sacred thing, but a human life, when weighed against the religious prejudices of a great force from which hundreds derive their means of livelihood, is a small consideration indeed. When the face of Miss Harmon is not against the vote of the group, commercial house of Girdlestone, is evident which must go to the wall; the house has for nearly forty years been a bright spot in the darkness. If it should fall now it would be a stain thing black and a scandal. You see, therefore, that greater interests are at stake than the mere death of this world. Having seen that this sad accident might arise, I had made every arrangement some time before. This building is, as you may have observed, in some degree situated in a hollow and secluded part of the country. It is walled round, too, in such a manner that any one residing here is in fact virtually a prisoner. I removed the Harmon family, and any party do not become suddenly wrong during the Lenten season. We do not give them up for that reason, but because we have set our minds and hearts on other definite things and we will and have time to carry on both successfully. Lent is a time for self-inspection for taking a religious and spiritual inventory of ourselves. A time to examine our actual lives with the ideal life we would live. But some one night we ought to be all the good that we can do, live during Lent. Suppose we were to go to Hell, but to make ourselves very, very shining, almost flame-like, well-scrubbed, well-polished, well-burnished for a period of life? And Christ is the last person who would have an objection to this. He would be willing to have us shine at the bench of judgment, and then with his robe to a brilliant, blessed thing. Religion is a thing of the heart. It is only a means to an end, and that end is spiritual and heavenly.

"But in saying that it would not be desirable—in fact, it would be wrong—to let our lives go to pieces during Lent, and to let our souls become very ghostly, almost faint, and, unfortunately, we would surfeit ourselves on the sacraments of life! And Christ is the last person who would have an objection to this. He would be willing to have us feed on the bread of life

HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT.

A Subject That is Demanding Much Attention in New York.

(Special Correspondence.)

In determining upon our highway improvement policy we must consider the purpose that the roads are to serve. The most important use to be making the farmer to market his produce and procure supplies at the least annoyance and expense for transportation. Being the foundation industry, we may justly claim that the first object should be to provide enhanced facilities for travel and traffic between the farmer and the business centers or shipping points. The welfare of the state depends upon a prosperous and remunerative agriculture, and plans should be made to conserve the interests related thereto rather than to build long lines of connecting highways that are not of material use to the farmer or any other business or industry. The establishment of through roads should be made secondary to an improvement of the feeding highways that are used to reach every point from which produce is shipped or that is in the f a center for the purchase of supplies.

The proposal to set aside something over $3000 annually in the state to be expended, at state expense, to constitute a so-called trunk system, while plausible on paper, does not carry entirely argument, and should not prevail over the needs and demands of the farming districts that would not be reached by the state system. Some localities would derive advantages from the use of roads there built, obtain relief from taxes in lessens of their holdings and profit by the enhancement of property values that would follow highway improvement; while in comparison other localities that the state is under no such obligation to aid will be left to struggle as best they may under adverse conditions.

If there was an unlimited fund at the command of the state, each locality might in time be reached by a share of the benefits. But the limited dole would cover $3000 annual, and it will require practically all that regular and state to complete the state roads as projected for the legislative consideration. While provision is made in the bills introduced by the joint committee for bank state and county roads, yet it may be safely foreseen that the state roads are to have first attention, and when that is accomplished the fund will be absorbed, and the state cannot therefore assist in the improvement of the county roads.

The question of through roads as against the enabling business roads is of far more importance than many appreciate. Every town hamlet or side ting tradition is entitled to contribution by the distribution of favors that the state has to grant, and there should be no privileged localities. The state could build trunk highways for one town or district and withhold the same advantage from another. The roads that are of sufficient importance to justify expensive construction and maintenance should be a joint charge upon the state, county and town and be so supervised that they will provide an equitable division of benefits as between localities. With such a policy the final of the state can be made to cover a much greater acreage, and there will be no discrimination.

Rural Churches and Grange.

The grange can never fill the place of the church in rural communities, nor as an exchange. And this it has never attempted. Go where you will and you will find that the best workers in the grange, if they are members of any church are active members and foremost in every movement for the upbuilding of the church.

The men who contribute money and time for the erection of grange halls are usually liberal supporters of the pastor and church. The good Patron and the patriotic citizen are synonymous terms.

Granger or Patron.

An observantive individual from somewhere has discovered that there is no such word as "granger," that the one and only appellation of a member of the grange is Patron of Husbandry. This so called "discovery" has been made many times during the past forty years. Yet "granger" has been the popular name for members of the great Order, and "granger" it shall be until the end of time. Applied at first by the Patrons in ridicule, it has come to be a synonym of honor and respect. No true Patron is ashamed of the name "granger."

Colonel Robert H. Thomas, one of the oldest members of the Pennsylvania state grange, died a few weeks ago. He was secretary of the state grange in 1873, the year of the organization, and retained that office much longer.

A new grange national bank was opened recently at Downington, Pa. Luncheon was served to 2,000 persons who were present to attend the ceremonies.

Some of the officers of the New York state grange are beginning to talk about 100,000 members of the grange in the state alone about 1910.

Fairfield county, Ohio, has voted to send the Ohio Grange Record to each of the subordinate grange in the county.

Speed of Electric Signal.

Sir Robert Ball states that if a telegraph wire were carried seven times around the earth on the line of the equator, a distance of 25,000 miles, the electric signal would make the seven circuits in one second.

FARM HOME DEDICATION.

A Pleasing Idea Put into Concrete Form by Mortimer Whitehead.

Not in New Jersey alone, which is its home state, but in every other state, is the name of Mortimer Whitehead a familiar one. In the early years of the Order he was lecturer of the national grange and is still doing valiant work for that great farmers' organization. His latest effort "for the good of the Order" so far gone he is the writing and publication of a synthetic ceremony for the dedication of farm homes.

This ceremony of dedication is to be used out of doors on the lawn or grounds near the home. The arrangement of officers' stations is the same as when the grange is in session in the hall. The home to be dedicated has a banner or streamer hung upon the porch, and on this banner the name is concealed until the time of inveiling occurs. Members of the feeder and visitors are grouped about the home apart for the officers. The idea is to have the farm home named and then dedicated by this impressive ceremony. We anticipate that this ritual will be adopted at the next meeting of the national grange and then be given officially on the Order for use. We cannot explain further in detail, but will say and that some of the poetic conceits in the ritual are most exalted in sentiment, beautiful in expression and in every way worthy of the object to which the writer dedicates the work.

COUNTY DEPUTIES' MEETING.

New York Submasters Meet For Interchange of Opinions.

There was a large attendance at the meeting of the county deputies at Syracuse, N. Y., on March 15. Every county but four was represented. The morning was informal. In the afternoon the county deputies gave reports of the meeting. The morning session of the Order was devoted to the work of the subordinate grange. The following were the speakers: Secretary N. N. Giles on "The Farm Truck Gardener and Other Things," State Master Godfrey on "Good Roads," Fred Sheppard on "Education of Agriculture," E. S. Comstock on "The Grange Deputy as Others See Him," James Wilgate took for his subject "The Sisters," and J. H. J. Watkins talked about "The Story Teller."

The Grange Lecturer.

The committee in good of the Order at the last national grange meeting said, among other things, that the lecture of a grange should be selected with great care, for to this most important official is left the work of one only getting up and presenting planning not unexciting programmes, but of molding and developing the intellectual character of the younger members. The lecturer, if a good one, cannot be omitted, but should be short and interesting and so varied from time to time as to cover all phases of farm life in and out of doors. The current topics of the day should be discussed from a nonpartisan standpoint. But especially should we not be discuss those questions which are purely local in character and have to do with our town, our particular locality and our home. We have seen great improvement in the surroundings of farm homes after a good, active grange has been established in many a rural community.

Not For Personal Gain.

Those who go into the grange for the purpose of using the Order to further their interests personally, politically, financially or otherwise will not stay in it long. The sooner such members are let go or made to know that the grange cannot be used by them to further their individual interests the sooner it will be for the good of the grange, for they drop out the better for all concerned.—New York Farmer.

A Suggestion.

Here is a suggestion for the lecturer. Next summer, when the weather is pleasant and driving is good, ask your members to take a drive out about the country and make a brief call here and there on the farmers. Then make a note on paper, or in the mind, of the observations made and report them to the grange at the following meeting. It will afford a great deal of amusement and considerable information.

Uniform Text Books Opposed.

In the afternoon the county deputies gave reports of the meeting. The morning session of the Order was devoted to the work of the subordinate grange and many questions were asked concerning it. In fact, the entire session might be given the title of "A Question Box." A committee was appointed to prepare a programme for the next meeting, which will be held in conjunction with the state grange meeting, and papers will be prepared on topics of greatest interest to deputies. In the evening a banquet was held by the deputies. J. J. Durdan was toastmaster. The following were the speakers: Secretary N. N. Giles on "The Farm Truck Gardener and Other Things," State Master Godfrey on "Good Roads," Fred Sheppard on "Education of Agriculture," E. S. Comstock on "The Grange Deputy as Others See Him," James Wilgate took for his subject "The Sisters," and J. H. J. Watkins talked about "The Story Teller."

NATIONAL REPRESENTATION.

Some of the Larger Grange States Are Native Born Sixteenth Rights.

An important resolution passed at the last meeting of the national grange relating to the effect that the state grange adopt a method of representation in the national grange by which each state shall be represented according to membership. It will be remembered by those who are familiar with the workings of the national grange that two years ago Mr. Kegley, from Washington state, introduced a resolution of similar import, but it was given a back seat. But it is more than likely that a resolution changing the representation in the national grange will be introduced at the next annual session of the national grange. The matter is being urged in Michigan as well as in New York and other states. There is obvious injustice in the present method of representation in the national grange, considering the paid up membership. New York, with its 77,000 members, has but two votes. Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Indiana and Colorado have ten votes, with a combined paid up membership of 4,300. Several other states could be added to these five before a membership equal to New York state is met, and these five states have ten votes for 4,300 members, while New York, with its 77,000 members, has only two votes. New York has three counties, each of which exceeds in membership these five states combined. While in some reports the present system should be retained, there are others where the representation should be modified. Why is greatly to be desired, and we anticipate a new discussion and question upon the national grange meets in Washington next November.

NOT ORDINARY FARMING.

State Master Richardson of Massachusetts Raises Wild Animals.

A rather unusual kind of farming is pursued by State Master C. D. Richardson of Massachusetts, but he is one of the successful farmers on a large scale. At West Brookfield he has a preserve with deer, elk, buffaloes, boars, foxes, wild geese, pheasants and nearly every other kind of wild animal known to the temperate zone. He has been in this business of breeding animals for about ten years, and is doing that thing on quite a large scale. He has 40 buffaloes, 25 wild boars, a dozen bears, 100 pheasants and geese and almost innumerable foxes, coons, muskrats and other small game. There is a large number of wild animals in every part of the United States supplied from the West Brookfield preserve. In trade shipments to New Zealand and Germany, the shipment to New Zealand including twenty-four bears and twelve elk. His most extensive foreign trade is with Germany and Denmark. Recently he had a rush order from Germany for 150 muskrats, and the order was filled. The preserve is a fascinating spot covering about fifteen acres of his ninety-four acre farm.

Illinois State Grange.

The Illinois state grange has elected Oliver Wilson master, John Miller overseer, L. H. Richman lecturer, Clemmette E. Yates of Dundap secretary and adopted resolutions endorsing ship subsidy, favoring the establishment of a ship railway from the lakes to the gulf, favoring the election of United States senators by direct vote, favoring the parcels post system, urging each township to county with the provisions of the local option law, endorsing the movement for the establishment of postal savings banks, favoring the amending of the game laws, making it unlawful to shoot quail, pigeons, prairie chickens or pheasants for five years; that hunting on Sunday in specimen without permission of the owner shall be a misdemeanor, that all game killed should be carried into view and that hunting on Sunday shall void the license of the hunter.

An Interesting Record.

A grange at Carson, N. D., has recently celebrated its fifteenth anniversary. Five of the twenty-two charter members were present. Mrs. Flora J. Miles, now Pomona of the state grange, has been lecturer of this grange since its organization with the exception of one year. The first master served seven years, and the first woman to hold the office of Pomona did so at a meeting for ten years. Fifty-five members of this grange have married in the fifteen years, and only three have died.

IMMUNE TO GERMS OF TYPHUS.

Doctor's Mistake Would Have Been Serious But for Good Health.

A man in sound health need fear neither from typhoid germs, according to a recent report of a Lancashire doctor, author of a damage claim by the proprietor of a Malvern Hydro against the local council for contaminating his establishment a water shed. Dr. Thomas, one of the greatest English experts on typhoid, was a witness. The bacillus, he said, is not chance that a drop of water may contain a population equaling the entire world.

"Five swallows million," he exclaimed, cheerfully.

"How did you like them?" inquired the judge, immediately curious.

"I enjoyed the pleasure of swallowing for three weeks, and the result was 100 per cent I felt happy. It was an accident, however. I was testing water and to contain typhoid bacilli. The weather was hot, and one day I drank a tumbler of water at a spring. Too late I discovered that it was a glass too much. I had put the typhoid germs. Had my health been impaired I should have a good excuse I should have suffered. As it was, I felt no ill effects."

YALE MEN TAKE TO THE LAW.

The Bar Still Attracts One Third of the University's Graduates.

The statisticians at Yale have drawn up a table to show what occupation the graduates of the university then have chosen in the last century. From the table it appears that the ministry has fallen off greatly as an attraction.

Since the century opened about 29 per cent. of Yale graduates were ministers, however, beginning in 1840 this number took a great fall. Since 1865 the average has been 8 per cent.

The averages for law and medicine have remained about the same. Of those who take up the study of medicine are doctors. In law the figures have been steadily about 32 per cent.

In teaching and science the figures show a horizontal very gradually from about two per cent. to 11 per cent. The strongest upward tendency has been that of business. The farmers have fallen off ever since the southern planters ceased to enter Yale.

Business now attracts about one-third of the men, and the law about one-third. The other third is divided between the ministry, science, teaching, forestry and a few other branches.

TROUBLE WITH MODERN CHILD.

Too Early Made Acquainted with the Pomp of the World.

Miss L. F. Stearns in her lecture on the "Thankless Child" in Milwaukee, pleaded for children to have time to be children. "I know of a Milwaukee mother who was surprised lately at the bill at a birthday party which her daughter (a child of eight) had attended two liveried servants stood at the door to receive the gifts the children brought. The same little girl who was footed at the party, wrote a formal good, is not to go to call upon some child of her own age in her mother's carriage, accompanied by a footman and driver, and when she arrives, presents her visiting card before seeing her friend." Miss Stearns compared this complicated entertainment with that of the great John Ruskin, who had yet four less during his entire childhood, but who spent many enraptured hours with those, and he attributed his inane for nobleness to the fact of his blocks, one of the toys, having interested him in building at so early an age.

U. S. AIDS GOOD ROADS.

Action of New York Adds to Renewed Efforts.

The national government, through the Postoffice Department, is exhibiting renewed interest in the good roads movement since the State of New York by a majority of 1,000,000 land issue the proceeds of which are to be expended on improving the highways of that State. Because of the recent road law advocated by the heads of the department and in giving every encouragement to the several States in the construction of good roads. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has been actively compassionate with the State highway officials of New York since July, 1912. That interest lies in the fact that of the 71,000 miles of public highways in the State of New York 41,116 miles, or 58 per cent, are daily traveled by 1,700 rural carriers in the delivery and collection of mail, at a cost to the federal government of about $1,500,000 a year. The government is now actively encouraging similar measures in Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire and New Jersey. In a press release the Postoffice Department is holding out the inducement that once the establishment of rural delivery from values have been duly measured and a case made out of an increased velocity of mail delivery, attributable to the introduction of rural delivery.

GILLETTE DIES IN CHAIR.

Confesses He Killed Sweetheart and Then Goes Calmly to Death.

Confessing to the murder of his and the full penalty of the law, Harry Gillette, 19 years old, a farmer of Ann Arbor, died in the electric chair at Auburn prison, Auburn, N. Y., without a sign of weakness and with the same lack of emotion which has characterized him from the time he was arrested shortly after the crime. Gillette appeared to have been tired of his life, and in a statement he said he had no spiritual advisers, mentioning that the ministers had visited him and made a confession of his guilt. The crime for which Gillette paid the penalty he committed at Big Moose lake in the Adirondacks, July 11, 1912. He was convicted on circumstantial evidence after a trial in which he testified that he killed his friend Crippen in self-defense. Gillette's story was that Crippen had made a proposal to him that he should take his sweetheart, Miss Jones, to the Big Moose lake for a week's outing. The boy said that Crippen had made the proposal to him while they were fishing together on the lake. Gillette said that he had told Crippen that he was not a pimp and that he was not the man to do such a thing. Crippen, he said, had then struck him with a club and had attempted to strangle him. Gillette said that he had taken the club from Crippen and had struck his assailant with it in self-defense. The girl was not in the boat when the fight took place, Gillette said, but she had been with the men when they had left the camp that morning. Gillette said that he had thrown the body of his sweetheart into the lake and had then rowed to the other end of the lake and had hidden the body in the woods. He said he had gone to the camp of Crippen's father and had told the story of the fight. He said that he had then rowed to Big Moose station and had taken the train for his home in Ann Arbor. He said that he had told his story to his father and mother and had then gone to the home of his sister in Albany, where he was arrested. Gillette's father, a farmer, testified that his son had told him the story of the fight and had then left home. The girl's father testified that he had searched for his daughter and had then had Gillette arrested. Gillette's father said that he had never had any trouble with his son before. The boy was reared on a farm and was a good student. He was a member of the Methodist church and was a member of the Sunday school class. Gillette's father said that his son had been a member of the church since he was 14 years old. The father said that his son had been a member of the church since he was 14 years old. Action of New York Adds to Revenue Bill Market May 1.

The national government, through the Postoffice Department, is materially improved revenue in the postal funds accrues since the State of New York gave the national government 1,000 miles of roads of which one to be opened up improving the highways of that State. Because of the many rural free delivery routes radiating out from the metropolitan centers, the government in the several years in the undertaking of good roads. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has been actively cooperating with the State highway officials of New York since July, 1908. This annual increase in the fact that of the 74,000 miles of public highways in the State of New York 31,110 miles, or 35 per cent, are now traveled by 1,781 rural carriers in the delivery and collection of mail, at a cost to the federal government of about $1,200,000 a year. The government is now actively encouraging similar movements in Maine, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire and New Jersey. The Postmaster General's Department is holding out the inducement that upon the establishment of rural delivery farm values have mounted rapidly increased and a good part of the increased valuation can be directly attributable to the introduction of rural delivery.

GILLETTE DIES IN CHAIR.

Confesses He Killed Sweetheart and Then Goes Calmly to Death.

Chester H. Gillette, Harold Hill's foil, died in the electric chair at Auburn prison, Auburn, N. Y., without a sign of weakness or wavering. The same lack of emotion which he displayed from the day I. was arrested charged with his crime. Gillette confessed to have been fully responsible for his death, and he said he was sorry for the spiritual advisers immediately after the execution to be informed that he had expressed no sorrow of his guilt. The crime made a sensation when it was first disclosed for which Gillette paid the penalty. Gillette was a nephew of Big Moser, one of the millionaires of Big Moser in the Adirondacks, July 11, 1906. He was also a witness on a subsequent trial in which his sweetheart's parents were charged with the same crime. These letters have been presented as evidence in their behalf. The young girl, who had prepared for her marriage to Gillette, was drowned in Big Moose lake after a struggle. The conviction was based on circumstantial evidence. Gillette's counsel intended to carry every means to save him from the electric chair.

70 KILLED IN MINE EXPLOSION.

Fifty Rescuers Perish Striving to Save Victims of Earlier Disaster.

Near Hanau, Wyo., seventy miners were entombed in No. 1 shaft of the Union Pacific Coal Company as the result of two fearful explosions of gas, Saturday, which not only completely wrecked the workings of the mine, but brought great horror to the town. Fifty of the miners formed a rescue party which was fearfully striving to dig its way to the rescues of the miner in lifting out the bodies of twenty more men and but their lives in an explosion, which occurred exactly an hour later. Among the rescuers was State Mining Inspector D. M. Price of Rock Springs, who was one of those digging away in the mine.

The double disaster is the second in the mine within a week. It was quickly sealed up and work went on as usual in the part not affected. Meanwhile a party of experienced fire bosses and gas men explored the adjacent workings and found no gas. Fire bosses and men were sent into the mine, where they worked steadily up to 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The day was an holiday in the mine and 2nd shifters, drivers and others who had been employed in that part of the mine were not asleep in the new shaft. Otherwise the catastrophe would have exceeded that of June 8, 1907, when 102 men and boys were blown up a similar explosion.

Charles Harris left the mine at 2 o'clock and carried from charge that the fire was getting worse and that the miners were approaching a dangerous stage. Exactly an hour after the explosion the entire mine was in a terrible state, which wrecked many buildings in the town and shook the ground for miles around the underspeaking. Crowds of women and children ran to the mine in a frenzy. The meaning of the sound being only too well known. Fifty rescuers were soon on the ground and began to dig their way through the debris which blocked the entrance.

At 10:30 o'clock a second explosion, ten times louder than the first, shook the town causing a scene of panic. The rescuers were overwhelmed at a point in the shaft where they came from the opening. From the present state of the disaster the details of the mining country that their lot was as hopeless, as that of the first party.

Bandits on Santa Fe Slay Messenger and Loot Express Car.

While robbed by masked bandits on the Santa Fe Pacific Express near Vernon, Kan., early Sunday morning robbers entered the express car of the Wells-Fargo Company and murdered the messenger, H. A. Bailey, of Kansas City, and went through the safes, obtaining a booty of $1,000 in money, besides jewelry.

Bailey's body was found when the train reached Newton. It was stretched on the floor of the car. He had been shot in the left side and in the head. There was no evidence of a struggle, the bandits having taken the unfortunate by surprise. The robbery of the express car was easy, before the crime was discovered the bandits had begun to dig their way through the debris which blocked the entrance.

GET BUSY ON LAWS, DEMAND OF ROOSEVELT

Short, Sharp Message to Congress, Urging Action on Pending Bills.

TO AMEND SHERMAN ACT.

Employers' Liability and Labor Injunction Statutes Need Changing.

President Roosevelt Wednesday sent a special message to Congress which it is expected will result in enabling legislation into useful if rarely activity. The communication from the White House is, in fact, a protest against congressional delay for months and the sixty-second session of the Senate. In it Mr. Roosevelt outlines and urges action as follows:

Tariff—Immediate placing of wood pulp on the free list, with a reduction of the duty on paper made from wood pulp; also provision for collecting data for the information of Congress when the next session of Congress, the necessary information to be gathered by congressional committees and by executive officers.

Labor—Legislation prohibiting the injunction writs now so frequently issued in labor disputes. Petitions for injunction in such cases to be made only in contempt proceedings to be decided by a judge other than the one who issued the order affect the block but on the jury.

Anti-Trust Law—Amendments permitting industrial labor associations to organize without violating the law, conflicting with the principles of justice and liberty.

Interstate Commerce Law—Amendments giving shippers right to free trade agreements subject to the approval of the interstate commerce commission, the commission giving power to the commission to make rates and pass upon all contracts issued by railways.

Financial—Action by Congress at the present session for establishment of postal savings banks also recommended.

Child Labor—Prohibition throughout the nation. Model law for District of Columbia.

Employers' Liability—Immediate enactment of a law providing such liability for employes of railways, also a law giving compensation to employes injured or killed in the service of government.

The message is short and to the point. The President confines himself to a discussion of the legislation outlined and points subjects which have made the present communication to Congress the theme of such widespread discussion.

Text of President's Message.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I call your attention to certain matters to which I think there should be legislation at the present session of the present session. There is some of them are of importance, and some of them are of little importance, but all of them are of importance to the people, and I hope that they will be taken up and acted upon at the present session.

The tariff on wood pulp and paper should be immediately revised. The duty on wood pulp should be reduced to the free list, and the duty on paper made from wood pulp should be reduced to a low figure. The information upon which the present tariff was made is obsolete, and the conditions now existing in the paper and wood pulp industries should be investigated by the proper committees, and the information so obtained should be made the basis of legislation. The information should be obtained by the committees of Congress, if it can be so obtained, but if it cannot be so obtained it should be obtained by the executive department of the government

An Erroneous Statement by Charlevoix Sentinel.

When the supreme court, independent Order of Foresters, meets in June it will ratify an increase in rates and a rescaling of charges to members dating to 1899 that will materially affect 250,000 members of the order. The new members will be put on the scale of charges of the National Fraternal Congress which will increase over the rates put in force by the I. O. F. in 1899. The most striking change will be that affecting present charges to the old members that came in prior to 1898. They will be asked to pay either in a lump sum or in another way enough to bring them up to date. Those who cannot pay the new rate will have the face value of their policies correspondingly decreased.—Charlevoix Sentinel.

In the first place the danger is only a threatening one at present. There is no increase yet to ratify. A bill has been introduced in the Canadian parliament and is under consideration which, it is stated, would seriously cripple if not destroy the I. O. F. The bill in effect creates two societies—one consisting of the present membership and another to consist of those who shall after January, 1909, become members, and in substance provides that no assessment or contribution of either class shall be used for the other." The obviousness of this is manifest, and the I. O. F., instead of ratifying, will probably, as other members of Dominion jurisdiction will likely do, oppose the bill becoming a law.

February 26, at Albany, N. Y., there was a meeting of the New York state Fraternal Congress to consider the new insurance law pending in the legislature. The result of this meeting was in substance that "after January 1, 1908, all member joining fraternal societies shall be rated in cost not less than the National Fraternal Congress table of mortality requires." C. H. Robinson, secretary of the Associated Fraternities of America, was present. The National Protective Legion Home guard says: "That such a bill is ideal in its nature, and that it will be generally copied by other states desirous of better conditions for the control of fraternal insurance there is no question."

Dr. A. T. Hoelle of Reliance, High Physician of the I. O. F. of Michigan, says the rates of that order are only slightly below the highest, but that it is probable that a raise will be made to an equality with the Fraternal Congress rates. The contemplated new insurance law in the Dominion of Canada is another matter, but has a more serious bearing upon the question as relates the I. O. F.—Bellaire Independent.

Death Was On His Heels.

Jesse P. Morris, of Shippers, Va., had a close call to the spring of 1906. He says: "An attack of pneumonia left me so weak and with such a feeble cough that my friends declared consumption had our, and death was on my heels. I was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery, it helped me immediately, and after taking two and a half bottles I was a well man again. I found out that New Discovery is the best remedy for coughs and lung disease in all the world." Sold under guarantee by F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Normal Notes.

Miss Hines and Miss Heed received a letter from Miss Tom Cotter, of last year's class. She expects to return to her school near Hope Flats April 4.

The Parents' meeting was held in the high school assembly room last Friday evening. The Normal room was too small to accommodate so many present. Mr. M. O. Graves of the Petoskey Business College addressed the meeting.

Miss Ella Meggison, class of '05 visited the class last Friday.

Maynard Scroggie spent Saturday and Sunday with relatives in Petoskey.

The Normal class will keep the same hours that the high school does for this week. School will begin at eight o'clock in the morning and will be excused at one o'clock in the afternoon.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Petoskey News: Another case of violation of the fishing laws was tried Monday before Justice Krieger, when Guy Wilmer, of Charlevoix, was arraigned before the magistrate on a charge of catching fish during the closed season, the offense occurring last November. The complaint was made by chas. N. Smith, of East Tawas, chief deputy game, fish and forestry warden of the state of Michigan. After hearing the evidence in the case, Wilmer was fined $25 with costs of $5, which he paid. Three thousand four hundred pounds of nets were seized last fall when the capture was made.

Cadillac special: William J. Mullins of Lake & Schumann company, of Muskegon, was in the city yesterday and arranged to make Cadillac headquarters for Lake & Schumann company's northern Michigan territory. These people have a number of picke eatings houses within in easy reach of this place and many more are to be erected this years, one of which will be at Cadillac. Being about the center of this territory something more than picking will be to order for Cadillac later on. The Howard Packard Land company will furnish information to cucumber growers and others who may be interested. The culture of cucumbers in northern Michigan is not a new matter, being far beyond the experimental stage. Four of the largest pickling concerns in the United States are well represented in this part of the state.

East Jordan Enterprise: Among the industrial enterprises which our Board of Trade has had in view to secure for East Jordan was a handle factory, the final details for securing which were completed on Thursday of last week, and East Jordan can now boast another factory. The company we understand is a new corporation, headed however by men who have experience in the trade elsewhere—Mr. F. H. McGraw, of Pittsburg, being at the head. Its corporate name is the Bennett Handle Co. of East Jordan. The factory is to be built on the West side, near the school house, and will be reached by a side track from the D. & C. Railroad. Building operations commenced at once, some lumber being delivered on the grounds the same day that the final arrangements to have team to cate here were made and rushed. It is expected that the factory will be completed and ready for operation by May 1st next.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER XX.—(Continued.)

"Of course, Wood! Why should he make the lightfully simple? Friend Hurt here does his work, we surmise, through the good dog Pepo, and lay her on the doorstep of the lodge. Anyone is an alarm and a scarecrow. The gate is bound open. We not merely go through the grounds, and lay her on the lawn. I don't think we need even go so far as that. Do you, Mr. Hurt?"

"He's a nasty one, is the good-eyed, kind Hurt, underneath his shiny exterior. He's the dominant by I have heard the saying a day."

"Mr. Hurt can be his point of the law. Our aim is, of course, to get our man out of his service. There is no reason why we should not have a suspicion of the truth."

"But there is none that she did not—that we will think that she did it on purpose. The worst will be better if we can. Hurt will see that the lady's work our friend here goes to the gallows as a conspirator, and that the story of Girdlestone holds up its head."

"Sorna, lock," said Ezra, in a whisper, "I hear her coming! Remember, I am indebted to her right springs footsteps as the lady of the house. She is at work in the lawn. Come and have a peep at her."

They all scuttled to the window and looked out. It was then that Kate, glancing up, saw the three cruel faces peering up, saw the three cruel faces peering down.

"She's a rare, well-built lass, and fair, as she clipped back from the vine-blow. "It is the ugliest job as ever I saw on."

"But was our city upon you?" Girdlestone stood, looking at him with frightened eyes.

"Ah, lass—as long as you pay me," the merry answered phlegmatically.

CHAPTER XXI.

The grey winter evening was beginning to fall as Kate Hurt, in doubts and all been arranged by the conspirators. It had gone so dull that Kate had slipped out for airing in a gardening, and had gone back to be with her father. Ezra left his father and Hurt by the fire and came out to the lawn half unseen. The girls did not see the guest and sorties as they waved their naked arms and sang in the cutting wind. A stiffy fog had come up from the sea and lay in light scattle over the upper branches like a thin veil of gauze. Ezra was sibilating as he approached, and Kate turned to him a hand on his arm, and Bedsworth, save that the naked Hebrews are shambling beside him.

"Haven't you got one word for me?" she said after he had gone a few paces. "It's but once a week, and then never a word or a kind word."

"I didn't see you, my lass," Ezra answered, with a leer and a wink.

"That place is the same as another to you, I reckon," she said. "You asked me to come here and I have come. You said once that you would be good to me, and you wear your own hem. When am I to know?"

"Why, there's no secret about that, lass. Be strong, lass, be strong! Ye know ye are mine, and ye know ye are mine, and ye know ye are mine, and

WHY ORGANIZE GRANGES?

Some Answers Given by Pennsylvania Patrons to the Question.

Some time ago Penn Master Hill of Pennsylvania sent a letter to several masters of newly organized granges asking for the most prominent reasons why their granges were organized. Their answers were interesting and varied. We make an extract from two or three of them. One master says, "First, co-operation; second, insurance; third, sociability and the general promotion of the farmers' business." Another says, "Co-operation and social advantages and to secure legislation in the interest of the farmer." A third reason given was: "The cause of its social features and because it has the avowed object of developing a higher manhood and womanhood among its members." It is a means of developing a feeling of fraternity and good will among farmers which cannot be otherwise developed. Because its fundamental principles are based on right and justice; also for the benefits derived through its co-operative features in selling better prices on the necessities of life and better rates of insurance." And a fourth gave these as their. First, to unite 6 months for farmers to meet in a body and feel as though they had some rights—in other words, make the farmer feel more independent; second, for the social advantages; third, for the advantages the grange extends to the members in general."

WHY JOIN THE GRANGE?

Here Are Five Good Reasons, and There Are Others.

First.—Because the grange is the oldest, best and most substantial farmers' organization and the association of the members helps them to become better farmers and better neighbors.

Second.—Because its social features are in great measure tend upward to the elevation of the farmer and farm life and place the wife on an equal in the work and joys of the other.

Third.—Because it is a school of thought, where men and women have an opportunity to develop good well and a fraternal feeling among farmers, giving them greater confidence in themselves and others and developing a higher manhood and womanhood among its members.

Fourth.—Because it is nonpartisan and nonsectarian, yet in its educational and literary work it is a great factor to awaken the farmer's mind and lead him to study and investigate questions which touch not only to the farm and farm life, but to affairs of state and nation as well.

Fifth.—Because it gives the farmers the best of opportunities to unite their efforts to secure the enactment of such nonpartisan legislation as will protect the farmer's interests and that which will be of a general benefit to all farmers, whether they be members or not.

What One Grange Did.

In Berkshire county, at West Stockbridge Center, is located a small but active grange. It has been organized but three years and has only eighty members. This grange owned a hall for a few months, then bought a farm and, with the exception of twelve acres, sold it off to neighbors. They then erected a dwelling house, wood shed and barn. The one and one-half story house was made into a tenement house, and at the rear of the hall are a kitchen and other rooms. The farm accommodates twenty-five horses. The members expect to enlarge the house and convert the second story into a grange hall and the present hall into a dining room. A grange of this sort can soon convert a dull, listless community into a live of "working bees."

Co-operative Trade.

The recent report of Aroostook Pomona grange disclosed the fact, says the Maine Farmer, that number 32 grange of that county, Caribou, is doing an encouraging start in the line of co-operative trade. The report states that the store of the organization did a sales business of over $25,000 during 1907 with a trade stock of not slightly over $6,000. Houlton, the banner grange for size in the world, does a much heavier business, but Caribou is booming and there is no good reason why scores more of Maine granges should not get in line.

An Active Pomona.

The forty-fifth session of the Dutchess county (N. Y.) Pomona grange was held at Poughkeepsie March 4, with an attendance of about 200. It was a very enthusiastic session. Resolutions were adopted favoring the Agrarian bill against race track gambling, favoring a trolley road on the Albany post road. Another requested that representatives of the legislature vote for the Scott bill regarding the unlawful detention of milk cars in transportation to market.

Some of the members of the Massachusetts state grange wanted to start a scheme for establishing a string of grange stores through the state, but the majority did not subscribe.

The New York state official organ has been enlarged and the title changed to the Farm Review.

A dozen team has to other official function to perform as such than to confer degrees.

Speed of Electric Signal.

Sir Robert Ball states that if a telegraph wire were carried seven times around the earth on the line of the equator, a distance of 25,000 miles, the electric signal would make the seven circuits in one second.

Prudic Expression.

This is little Dick's picturesque description of his first flash of lightning and first clap of thunder: "Oh, mamma, I saw an angel go into heaven and bang the door after it."

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

The Necessity For Secondary Agricultural Schools Decreased.

Of late there has been a marked increase in the number of agricultural colleges, and they are all improving rapidly in their equipment and facilities and are all engaging more in various forms of university extension work, such as farmers' institutes, correspondence courses, reading courses and experimental researches. There are thus attracting a large and ever larger class of students. But all this development of agricultural colleges and their work has only brought out the fact that under the best conditions and working to the fullest extent of their possibilities they can meet the educational requirements of only a small fraction of the youth upon our farms.

If any considerable body of the farm boys and girls are to receive agricultural instruction in the principles of agriculture and to receive the elementary local boys who are interested and want definite instruction as to farming, there must be supplied a system of schools of a lower grade than the college or what is known as secondary schools of agriculture. There is a strong demand for at least one such institution to place the teachings of agriculture in the curriculum of our public and high schools, but neither their present condition nor the possibilities of their future development promise any very definite hope of great value in this direction. Without doubt their courses of instruction could be much improved so as to awaken a love for and an interest in nature study and impart many facts that would be of lasting benefit to the young people who shall go out from these schools to live upon farms, but these schools will never be able to teach the subjects relating to agriculture itself without interfering with the general scope of their work. What always has until always continues to constitute the principal work of the schools, those preparatory for college work may well be added a limited amount of nature study, of wood working, domestic science and the elements of agriculture, but not enough instruction regarding any one to be given to perfect the student in any of these, and especially in this time of activity in farm and the science of farm economy. This must be brought to bear on all the schools of higher grade and yet to be within the reach of all must still be secondary to the colleges and of very access to all who would avail themselves of the benefit. W. N. HITCH.

Grange Libraries Popular.

In the matter of grange libraries Connecticut leads New England, if not the entire country. A few years ago a committee was appointed with Professor L. Phelps as chairman to arrange for and put in circulation ten traveling libraries of twenty books each. A careful system was outlined and the several libraries given twenty suitable books, so that each grange would include works of fiction, nature, travel, history and biography. There has been a steady demand for them, and many more calls have been received than could be supplied. This being the first twenty more libraries were published on the same form of arrangements for which were made at the last session of the Connecticut Grange at Hartford. This will make thirty traveling libraries, this being books each, circulating among the granges in the National State. The plan is very commendable and is worthy of still greater multiplication. Details of management, including the matter of obtaining a library or any suggestion bearing on the question, can be secured from Professor C. S. Phelps of Clapboville, Conn.

The Flag in the Grange.

It is a matter of regret that has been extensively adopted in the granges of New Hampshire that the correctly informed, of having the stars and stripes displayed in the grange hall. It is to be hoped grange in other states will follow the example and that in the near future no grange hall furnishings will be considered complete without the national emblem in the shape of a neatly draped flag. "Peace hath its victories no less renowned than war." Let us use every effort to instill this principle in the minds of our young people.

Juvenile Grange.

The juvenile grange idea should be developed into general practice. The juvenile grange is a good school for the boys and girls. It will teach them set of parliamentary law, proper rules of business and order. It would be difficult to imagine any other one that would be better for the farm boys and girls than the juvenile grange.

It is reported in the Maine papers that Fast State Master Gardner may be offered on the Democratic ticket at the next election. It will be remembered he was defeated by a small majority for state treasurer by C. E. Fletcher at the recent meeting of the state grange.

Every county deputy in the state of New York but four attended the meeting of the county deputies at syracuse, and a good deal good issued in the New York Farmer.

Scientific Leading.

"Oh, see, chickens and what are marvelous inventions," says the philosopher of fifty. "They make a new egg every time and still have the feeling that they are accomplishing something intellectual.

Just One of the Ways.

The declaration made recently by a New York judge that bad cooking drives men to drink only gives the more serious one another excuse for blaming everything on the women.

FIXED THE PIANO.

An Unmusical Variation in One of Gottschalk's Concerts.

Gottschalk, the pianist, was noted for his enormous physical strength almost as much as for his brilliant playing. On one occasion he gave a practical illustration of his strength which, while it did not display the delicacy of his touch, is most amiable light, undoubtedly afforded him much satisfaction.

He was in concert playing on a piano that was built on a new model, one of the properties of which was that the lift of the keyboard cover projected further over the keys than in most pianos, so that the instrument was open for playing. Gottschalk, who was accustomed to throw or at his best with considerable height during the performance of brilliant passages and was accused to this new form of keyboard, constantly hit his knuckles against the projecting lip.

This repeated rapping of his knuckles at last began to have an irritating effect on him, as the audience could plainly see. Suddenly after a particularly hard rap he stopped short in the middle of his selection, wrenched the offending cover out of the instrument by main force and hurled it across the platform with great violence. Then, with a smile of the greatest satisfaction, he resumed himself at the piano and continued his playing.—Chicago Record-Herald.

CIRCUS RIDERS.

They Were Kings of the Show in the Old One Ring Days.

Riders at one time were the chief attraction of the circus and were lauded as we now hill our "death defying deeds" in the old one ring days the whole performance was practically divided between the rider and the clown. When the rider was not riding the clown had his field all to himself, even the band ceasing to play until the clown came out of his joke, after which the rider resumed the performance. Some of the old time clowns were famous in the show printing, writes Tody Hamilton in the Washington Star.

When the late James A. Bailey made the tour of a western hotel for Robinson, the great rider, at $500 a week, payable in gold. The showman became sick of his bargain and tried to scare Robinson out of it by dwelling on the unhealthfulness of the climate. He told Robinson that it was very risky; that few people could stand it. But Robinson was wise and wouldn't scare and hoisted on the terms of the contract.

It took a whole trolley turn cold to scare Robinson on the long voyages every week and hand the champion jam in gold on the same he if the rider were at work, but Jim held Bailey to his contract. No rider before or since has ever received such a salary.

Fasting as a Sacrifice.

The custom of the collocus practice of fasting is very obscure. Herbert Spencer collected a considerable body of evidence to show that fasting may have arisen out of the custom among savage people of providing refreshment for the dead. These offerings are often made so as lavish a manner as necessary to involve the fasting in temporary starvation, and it is no uncommon thing for a man to ruin himself by a funeral feast. It is suggested that the fasting which was at first the inevitable result of such sacrifice in behalf of the dead may at certain times come to be regarded as an indispensable part of all sacrifice and so have survived as an established usage long after the original cause has ceased to operate.—New York American.

Where Politeness Doesn't Pay.

"French and German hats," said a hatter, "had last for as long as cows. It isn't the poor quality of the cats, but the fine quality of the manners that causes this. Lifting the hat is substituted in the hardest work that falls on the headpiece, and the French and Germans lift it to men and women equally, thus giving it twice as much labor as we do. Naturally, then, it wears out twice as quickly. It goes in the brim in no time over the water."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

But Yet a Man.

"I suppose I have about the most thoughtful, kind and considerate husband in the world," she was saying sadly. "When he comes home at about 2 of the morning, I mean at the hours he does, he always takes off his shoes so as not to make a sound when he always says in this most polite way imaginable:

"'Don't let me disturb you, dear, but will you please help me to pull off this collar button?'—New York Press.

HIS ARTISTIC SOUL REVOLTED.

Young Painter Saw Period of Suffering While Earning Needed Money.

The young artist, abased on the verge of starvation, had just accepted an order from an elderly patron to paint her portrait. When the terms and appointments had been fixed and the painter was descending the rickety studio stairs, a sun-cut friend of the young painter, who had overheard the deal, rushed in from the next room to offer his congratulations.

To his surprise, however, he found his friend sitting downcast before his easel, his head in his hands.

"Why, Francois, why so downhearted?" he inquired, dropping short to stare at the artist. "Hadn't I just overheard you bagging an order to paint a face at 1,000 francs?"

"Yes," replied Francois, coldly.

"And your need of the money is something fierce, isn't it?"

"Yes," said the other, coldly.

"Then, my friend, you should be jubilant, instead of sitting in your lonely attitude!"

The artist now lifted his head slowly and gazed pleasantly at his companion. "Melvin," said he, "did you get a glimpse of her?"

"No."

"Then," said the other, allowing his head again to fall into his hands, "you do not know, my friend, what torture I underwent to refrain from turning till night for a whole week studying that face!"—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

As to Hogs.

A venerable Chinese humorist, who likes to tell a tale or sway a fan, said the other day: "In China every gentleman works for a living. Some of them do it by means of all things do work in some parts of Ireland, and in the northern of Germany are beasts of burden. Abraham Lincoln used to tell stories, and then in his younger days working in Indiana and Illinois, in the backwoods, when a hog would get into a field of growing clover, the workmen dug a big hole in the clover ground, filled it almost half full of water, scattered a few bushels of corn thereon and turned loose the swine. The latter plunged in after the corn, and in a short while had converted the contents of the hole into excellent mortar.

The Proud Maid.

Robert Burr, the British novelist was entertained at dinner by a North Woodward avenue family. The men adjourned to the smoking room and the hostess lingered to give orders to the maid.

"O," said the young girl, "I was so proud to have been able to wait on Mr. Burr. He is the first famous man I have ever attended.

And then in a burst of maidenly confidence, she exclaimed:

"Perhaps some day I may be called upon to wait on Shakespeare."—Detroit Free Press.

Luminous Birds.

Owls do not appear to be the only luminous birds. The eulogy of "the Wise Birds of North America" allude to the phosphorescent plumage of the great blue heron. The breast feathers of this species, it appears, are furnished with a phosphorescent luminous substance. The bird itself is known as the "lightning bird." It is asserted that the luminosity may be of service to the bird, both by attracting the fish and enabling it to see them.

GETS TRACE OF KIDNAPED GIRL

Mrs. Thomas of St. Louis Receives Clew to Child Lost in 1903.

Mrs. Marjorie Thomas of 3700 Lucas street, St. Louis, received a letter a few days ago from Mrs. Nora Webb, her cousin, whose home is in California, but who is visiting in Hazen, Illinois, saying she had learned that Mrs. Nannie Grant, who kidnaped Mrs. Thomas' daughter Lelia when she was the infant's nurse in Chicago in the Maplewood district of St. Louis suburbs, now confessed on her death bed that the child had been brought to Hazen, Illinois, and placed in the home of Mrs. Angel, who then resided in 2139 Lincoln avenue, St. Louis. The St. Louis records show that Lucile Angel adopted "Lelia Adams" in Illinois in 1903, and gave Mrs. Nannie Grant as guardian. Mrs. Thomas' maiden name was Lelia Jones Hunter, her first husband, was killed in a railroad accident a few days after their child, Lelia Graham Hunter, was born. While the young mother was in a hospital in St. Louis with typhoid fever her child with its nurse disappeared. Five adverts were sent in the interest of the child and some were answered. Later the nurse's mother married a Mr. Thomas, by whom she has three children, Abbie, Mrs. Thomas she married a letter from another woman Mrs. Nannie Hunter, who had given her daughter to her last child's whereabouts. She has had to be carried home. The woman is a waitress.

WAR ON FRISCO PLAGUE

Great Cleaning Up of Coast City for Coming Visit of Big Fleet.

After a fight lasting for months the marine hospital service is at last empowered to wind over the proposed visit of the battleship fleet to San Francisco. Sanitary work has been done by Surgeon General Wyman, in cooperation with the local authorities, toward stamping out the bubonic plague, and complete victory appears to be in sight. It was not at one time that unless the progress of the plague ceased the fleet would not be allowed to touch at San Francisco, those exposed to the disease, there is no telling how long it would cut into the fleet, and the government has been convinced, it appears, to take no chances.

At Magdalena bay, where the fleet now is, it will remain some time for the men to recuperate after the cruise to Honolulu. Since the plague first developed 221 cases have been reported in the city, of which 128 have been fatal, and thirty-eight cities, towns and counties have reported infected with the plague. Of the 50 per cent of all affected.

The common cat is the greatest disseminator of the infection, and the surgeons urged merciless war against him. In the last week reports from the health officer showed 1,000 cats killed, and 1,000 rats have been trapped, 7,888 twenty rats had been examined bacteriologically and twenty-six had been found infected with the bacillus of the plague.

The bubonic disease is common in 18 this state of investigation and the treasury department has issued elaborate instructions to the marine hospital service and health officers, directing how flies shall be collected and forwarded to Washington for the department chemists exhaustive reports of the experiments with rats, mice and fleas, the last of which the commission in India, where the bubonic plague has become a concern, for years, have been supplemented with studies made in the Pacific seas; and now it is decided to extend the work to other places in the United States.

DENVER'S ANARCHIST.

The Desperate Character Who Murdered Judge Gabbert.

The picture herewith presented is the best one ever made of Gilsapie Alla, the Italian anarchist who assassinated Father Dybwski and later in Denver. He written description of the man's character and appearance, he is one of the desperate profile in fact, Ilkapap, Alla was speedily found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to his owl, after conviction, he was stripped and given a new suit of clothes, from which he was immediately searched and cleansed—even new bed clothing was replaced. In spite of these precautions the assassin managed in some manner to procure a razor blade and commit a murderous assault on a "trusty" who was engaged in sweeping an area cell. The wounded man, the trusty's friend, but not fatally, and then killed himself, but was soon recovered. Denver believes there is in the city a gang of anarchists ready to do any thinit to aid him.

GILSAPIE ALLA

250,000 MINERS QUIT IN SOFT COAL STRIKE

Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Trans-Mississippi Men Are Out.

LABORING FOR SETTLEMENT.

Central Pennsylvania and Indiana Pits in Operation and Peace Is Considered Probable.

The long-threatened strike of the soft coal miners of the United States is on. Three hundred thousand miners ordered out yesterday, from Texas to Pennsylvania on the east to Colorado on the west and from Texas on the south to Canada on the north decided off work on April 1 to celebrate a miners' holiday, of this number approximately 250,000 left the pits and mines with their difficulties with the mine owners have been settled.

The call to the strike, work embraces 2,000,000 soft coal diggers in mine, the miners in western Pennsylvania, comprising about 15,000; Southwestern Kansas, 12,000; Arkansas, 1800; Texas, 3,000; Indian Territory, 1,000; Missouri, 10,000; Iowa, Illinois, upwards of Illinois, central Pennsylvania, and Indiana are the only big fields where work will not be stopped.

The department circulated exhaustive reports of the experiments with rats, mice and fleas, the last of which the commission in India, where the bubonic plague has become a concern, for years, have been supplemented with studies made in the Pacific seas; and now it is decided to extend the work to other places in the United States.

The operators in that section of the country refused conflicts in order an agreement with the miners and President Ryan of the district he issued orders for 45,000 men to walk out and to remain out until further orders.

Operators and miners are agreed that there will be no resumption of work for ten days at least. The operators want the abolition of the sympathetic strike with one year of arbitration at all times guaranteed. They also want the same 32,000 miners' wages, which they had among that in force in 1903, 21 cents. In Western Pennsylvania it is 32 cents.

The Indiana operators and miners have agreed to continue operations pending negotiations for an agreement. Southern and West Virginia operators and miners have made a similar agreement.

In the Southwest the suspension is total. The miners had withdrawn their demand for increased wages, but the operators declined to make any concession. The shutdown in the Southwest, comprises Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Oklahoma and Missouri.

In the central coaling area also stopped pending the formation of a new working agreement.

DEEP WATERWAY TO THE GULF

The Mississippi River Commission, Favors Project.

A deep waterway, between Chicago and the gulf seems to be one of the possibilities of the near future. The project has been discussed for many years, but now it bangs in seems to be chasing a chimed.

The Mississippi River Commission, in a report to the heads of the Secretary of War, proposes to go ahead with that portion of the Inland-Gulf deep waterway, which this within its jurisdiction on the Mississippi river. The members believe that it will be both economical and in the line of permanency for them to adopt immediately a deep waterway project, and to future work from time to time, large in mind instead of temporary bond enrichment, desultory dredging and sporadic attempts to keep certain harbors. The report recommends that the Secretary of War ask Congress to give the commission a million of dollars a year for three years, to aid Illinois to the same end, the completion of the commission, and with this amount permanent work will be carried on. The commission now has at its disposal the sum of $750,000 a year for three years and it holds in the report to the Secretary of War that it is unexpected the $6,000,000 already authorized by Congress in an economical way if there is ever any thought of a modern deep waterway.

The real sinews of war of this record breaking project the Mississippi River Commission has in the fact that three members of the commission are also members of the Board of Survey, which was authorized at the last session of Congress to study the Lake Michigan to the Mississippi project. It is believed that the board will be ready to report to the Secretary of War October or November and that it will recommend a 22-foot waterway. With the Mississippi River Commission already committed to a deep waterway, with the engineer and the prospect of an intelligent, comprehensive and practical report from the Board of Survey, the project seems to be in the gulf, there is every reason for believing that the Lakes-to-the-Gulf deep waterway will be secured at this session of Congress. Like a snowball, once a survey has already been made and a complete report is in the remains of the commission for that portion of the deep waterway from Chicago through the Illinois canals, the Illinois and Illinois rivers to St. Louis.

With a board of Survey outlining the plan for the entire distance, appropriations will be ready for the big ditch at the starting of the work.

THIRTY-SIX ARE LOST WHEN WARSHIP SINKS

British Torpedo Boat Tiger Is Cut in Two by the Cruiser Berwick.

CRASH COMES IN DARKNESS.

Smaller Craft Is Severed Like Paper and Forward Part Dives to Bottom Instantly.

Thirty-six men, including Lieutenant Middleton, commander of the torpedo boat destroyer Tiger, and their lives in the collision of the isle of Wight Thursday night between that vessel and the British cruiser Berwick.

The Berwick was from the Portsmouth division of the British home fleet, and were engaged in night maneuvers in the channel while on their way to Portland. The night was dark and in the fog it was extremely windy. When the destroyer attempted to cross the cruiser's bow she was caught amidships and cut in two as with a knife, sinking almost immediately.

The dead, there, who were dressed in heavy oilskins and boots, went down with the vessel, and the living were thrown overboard from their heavy incumbrances. Some of the survivors were rescued the majority are engineers and stokers, who, being below decks, were able to keep themselves afloat until hauled from other ships, which came to the scene.

Cut as I. Made of Paper.

The smaller naval vessels were in the midst of the cruiser and larger ones, when the disaster occurred. The Tiger was cut in two as easily as I, and in the absolute darkness the Tiger was suddenly struck amidships and the forward half sank instantaneously and the aft section dived bow first. Some of them sank before help could reach them.

The war ship in the immediate vicinity soon had their boats overhauled and the scene of the tragedy was brightly illuminated by a conventation of searchlights. The river was at the time covered for a mile or two, just long enough to enable those on board to do life lists. Ship, there should active into the water and were ride to keep afloat until picked up.

Lieutenant Middleton, Midshipman was on the bridge at the time of the disaster and went down with the commander of the ship. The Tiger had a complement of fifty-nine men and was of 400 tons.

Religious Therapeutics.

Bishop Falconio of the St. Paul's Roman Catholic church at Chicago writes of the miraculous cures effected by the Catholic church. Bronson, over a year ago, and once taken up at the Lourdes shrine, was cured in the healing of the body through the soul, in the cure of Miss Lucile Fay, Miss Fay relapses out here this attempt to combine the science of medicine and religion is only a return to the usage of more primitive times. Dr. Lucas Fay, Miss Aullison churches recognized the healing power of the Lourdes shrine. Bishop Falconio discloses that the overwhelming response from the faithful has been greatly needed. He believes that the cures are in many cases due to the neglect of the truth of Christian therapeutics. But unlike Christian Science, the Catholic church recognizes the value of medical science, only holding that it is a different system from rational and organic diseases. Although and may be mentioned the "Lourdes" cures. They believe that the best scientific knowledge is not to be "ignored or slighted." Rather, it is to be used as an adjunct, subsequent to the efficient and more efficiency to those who are well.

National Labor Leaders Meet.

Representatives of the national and international trade unions assembled at the Washington headquarters of the American Federation of Labor, having been called to a conference to assess for the purpose of considering the proposed legislation affecting the liability of labor organizations as now constituted. Samuel Gompers, president of the association, decided to formulate a plan of organization to be presented to the Sixty-ninth Congress, which is expected to meet in December. The plan of organization will be submitted to the executive council of the federation for its approval, and if it is approved it will be presented to the Sixty-ninth Congress. Mr. Gompers said that the conference was called to consider the proposed legislation affecting the liability of labor organizations as now constituted. He said that the conference had decided to formulate a plan of organization to be presented to the Sixty-ninth Congress, which is expected to meet in December. The plan of organization will be submitted to the executive council of the federation for its approval, and if it is approved it will be presented to the Sixty-ninth Congress. Mr. Gompers

THE COUNTY CONVENTION.

An Enthusiastic Gathering of Charlevoix County Representative Republicans.

Conditions in the line of office work last week compelled the SENTINEL to close its column for the press on time last Wednesday afternoon, and the county convention struck us "between wind and water."

No more harmonious or enthusiastic political gathering was ever held in the county and about every township and ward was represented. County chairman W. J. Pearson called the convention to order, and L. S. See, of Charlevoix was elected chairman, and Harry Price, of East Jordan, was elected secretary. The following delegates were then elected:

State convention—Wm. Harris, H. I. McMillan, Harry Price, J. M. Harris, J. E. Converse, L. S. See, W. J. Gallagher.

District convention—F. A. Kenyon, A. A. Swinton, R. E. Sawville, D. F. Meech, G. W. Baxter, A. L. Conter, W. J. Pearson.

W. J. Pearson was unanimously chosen chairman of the county committee and H. I. McMillen was elected secretary.

A pleasing feature of the convention was the presence as delegates of Hon. Wm. Harris, of Norwood, and Hugh R. Miller of Boyne City. Both these gentlemen were members of the first republican county convention ever held in Charlevoix county—the fall of 1859—and of which the editor of this paper was secretary.

Mr. Harris referred feelingly to his long connection with the republican party, and spoke hopefully and encouragingly of the future, counseling harmony—and earnest effort in the campaign now so rapidly approaching.

The convention was an eminently successful political event.

In Calmness and Candor.

Last week, while yet the ward election returns were unsealed; with a pen actuated by the throbbing of a stricken heart,—and dripping with vitriol distilled in the laboratory of a perturbed soul, the editor of this paper wrote an editorial on the local election result.

In that editorial we used the term "poker room annex," to which exception is taken by the parties of the second part, as unjust and misleading. In using this term we may have erred, through ignorance, in failing to discriminate between the repertoire of "twists," "seven up," "pedro" and "five hundred," and the more heroic pastime in which the multi-colored ivory dices give zest and interest to the passing hours. The evidence seems to justify the protest, and we withdraw the offensive words referred to, all else to stand with full force and effect.

This supposes of one phase of the criticism, but the strict interpretation of the term "annex," as used, remains unaccomplished. Webster defines the word as "to join or add; as a smaller thing to a greater." This definition increases rather than lessens the dignity of the branch Coal brought about the defeat of the republican ticket last week, but it does not necessarily mean close proximity, else it might accompany Dr. Montague's office or the Charlevoix County Bank. We cut out the words, without reference to a far or near interpretation.

But we admit and emphasize every other word of the article in question. We assert that political autocracy, on a small scale, was the cause of our discomfiture, and appeal to the republicans of Charlevoix to get together as Republicans, and restore the party to its proper place in the government of this county.

Charlevoix must begin to play better politics, or there is much trouble ahead.

Exhibition by Allie Moore.

Allie Moore, the "Charlevoix Boy," the World's champion rope artist, leaves next week Tuesday morning for Chicago, to enter for skating events at the Lake Shore rink.

On Monday evening, April 20th, he will give an exhibition at the Charlevoix Theater, will give all an opportunity to see Allie, and witness the skill by which he has thus far cleaned up on all competitors, and placed himself at the top of his profession.

Admission to the gallery 15 cents. After the exhibition there will be a dance, for which 50 cents per couple will be charged. Charlevoix people should turn out and give the "Charlevoix Boy" a good hearty handshake for joying a good evening's entertainment.

The Ladies of the Maccabees Hold a Record Gathering Here Tuesday.

One of the most successful social and society events in the history of Charlevoix was the county convention of the Lady Maccabees at Bank Hall Tuesday.

Lady L. E. Tillotson, commander of White Rose Hive 443, called the convention to order, and then followed a lot of business that the counsel hard of humanity is not permitted, to know or appreciate. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Lady Baker, Boyne City.
Lieut. Com.—Lady Elston, Charlevoix.
R. C.—Lady Kline, East Jordan.
Fin. K.—Lady Aenis, Boyne Falls.
Serg.—Lady Jones, Bay Shore.
Chap.—Lady McIntyre, Ironton.
M. at A.—Lady Miles, Boyne.
Sent.—Lady Young, Charlevoix.

The ladies are vivid none, when they put up a barrah like this and cut out the lords of creation—the men. But the event was a most successful event from every standpoint. Flowers, with white roses predominating, were conspicuous everywhere, and the afternoon dinner, and evening lunch served in the banquet hall were perfect in every feature of cuisine and service.

Lady Elston of Charlevoix, and Lady Miles of Boyne City, were elected delegates to the Biennial Review at Toledo in June. The next convention will be at Boyne City.

The Market for Dairy Products.

To the Sentinel:

Good butter makes it with our market. It has the quality one may describe as "morish" the more one eats of it, the more he wants to eat. While bad butter goes much too far; it has lasting quality, staying power.

The butter maker can produce a high quality of butter, granted he has the necessary machinery and technical training, provided he can obtain plenty of good milk. Milk that is suitable for eating raw is suitable for the butter business. It must be clean, drawn from clean cows in a clean sanitary stable. If taken to the creamery for skimming it should be delivered sweet. To make sure of this, the milk should be promptly cooled to the temperature of well water. This precaution keeps the bacteria from growing that chance to get into the milk while milking goes on. It gives the creamery man a chance to control conditions. He can save "starter" to be calls his application of a batch of favorable bacteria, and manage affairs so that a desirable form he developed in the butter.

Those who find it worth while to skim there own milk will assist the creamery man greatly by cooling each batch of cream carefully, exposed to the air on a clean place of course, then covering the cans to prevent the entrance of dust or other contamination.

The production of butter fat for sale is good business. Men with good cows, provided with proper equipment and full of dairy sense are selling from ninety to one hundred dollars worth of butter fat from each cow annually.

The indifferent cows kept in an indifferent way, fed now and then and now and then allowed to shift for themselves afford no profit. Their owners are keeping them not they their owners.

The shiftful feeder will avail himself of every inexpensive form of feed that he can get, trying each to study how to get the maximum profit from his business.

The past winter those dairymen who could get cheap feed were in luck. One man is reported as being able to feed his herd for less than two dollars a day using plenty of pulp, some cotton seed meal and a little hay. His herd was yielding seven dollars worth of milk a day. Of course the manure made over, the feeding, leaving a handsome "margin" for doing the milking.

NORWOOD NEWS.

—Mrs. S. S. Spaulding of 19th Rapids, arrived Monday, and will visit friends in Norwood this week.

E. R. Harris and wife of Elsworth were here Sunday.

The Rev. R. A. Yost commences a series of revival meetings this week.

Mrs. Simmons died suddenly Monday morning at the residence of Anthony Clark of heart failure. Mrs Simmons was about 54 years old. She was the mother of James, Albert, George and Julius O'Brien, all of whom are living. Mrs. Simmons, came with her second husband, Mr. Fulton, and children to Norwood about 1870. Mr. Fulton died in 1876, and was buried in the cemetery at Norwood.

out, but there was no way of sending relief from here. The life saving station kept up a vigilant watch, and last Thursday the ice field, under the impulse of a high westerly wind, was driven into Little Traverse Bay, and with it went the Maeta, fetching up about two miles out, a little east of Big Rock Point, near this port. A heavy freeze Wednesday night stiffened up the ice, and the life savers took out a boat and two weeks rations, three of the crew coming ashore.

It was two days before this that Mate Lobert Hess put himself in communication with Capt. Robinson of the car-ferry, at Northport, which finally resulted in the rescue of the Maeta, as related above. The crew of five were not at any time alarmed. The little boat drifted back and forth between Cat Head and Skillagalee, firmly imbedded in the ice, and received very little damage. The crew passed the time playing cards and "swapping yarns." They had plenty of coal with which to keep themselves warm, and did not worry about food shortage, as they could have reached shore on the ice several times.

Just a Suggestion.

Down at Washington, when retrenchment is necessary, two or three battle ships are cut from the naval estimates, or uncle Joe Cannon cuts out the river and harbor bill.

We would not presume to advise the new city administration, but offer the hint that conditions suggest a rest of a year in the matter of street improvements.

We have been trotting a pretty good clip the past four years, with pavement, sewer, water towers, etc., and the burden is beginning to be felt. Certain work that has been commenced must be finished, but we believe that the council should this year exercise the most tight economy, even to the extent of cutting out any new work on streets.

We can get along a year, or even two, on what we have, without losing our prestige as a wide awake and public spirited city.

Letter to Mr. Nat Gates.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: When you can buy paint for less than Devoe, don't save your money.

Mr. Aaron Higgins, Plainfield, N. J., always used 15 gallons of paint for his house; Devoe took 11.

Mr. Ezra Rathbun, Williamport, Pa., always used 11; Devoe took 6.

Mr. Dial Young, Girard, Pa., always used a gallon for certain rooms; took half as much Devoe.

Mr. Nathaniel Barber, Canton, N. Y., bought 12 Devoe; used less than 6.

You can always buy paint for less than Devoe, don't save your money.

The wearing counts the same way and doubles the difference.

The cost of painting is by the gallon. Work paint costs most; most gallons. Yours truly —The teachers' institute at the Charlevoix Theater last Friday was a pronounced success. The attendance included teachers from nearly all points in the county, and the program was an interesting one. A fine musical program was interspersed, a very pleasing number being a violin rendition of Mascagnis Intermezzo, Ave Maria, from Cavaleria Rusticana, by Leslie Crane. The young man played with rare skill and feeling, and elicited an encore. The Dr. Vincent lecture in the evening was attend by most of the teachers and a Saturday morning session closed one of the most profitable and enjoyable institutes on record.

Railroad Wreck on Beaver Island.

A distressing railroad accident occurred last Thursday afternoon on the Beaver Island Lumber Co's logging railroad, at Bonner's Landing, about five miles from St. James, by which the locomotive engineer, a man named Chase, was killed.

The train, of several loaded cars was bound north, and was running about twenty miles an hour, when the rails spread, the engine going through the wire fence on the line of the right-of-way, and tipping over on its side. The fireman and brakeman jumped, and were uninjured, but Mr. Chase stuck to his throttle with a courage that would have done credit to a passenger engineer, and was crushed beneath the engine.

The dead engineer leaves a wife and four children. The remains were sent to his former home in Southern Michigan, accompanied by the stricken wife.

DAN SHANNON.

The Strenuous Revivalist Stirring Up the Ungodliness in the Chicago Region.

From the Record-Herald.

Evangelist "Dan" Shannon is nothing if not forceful.

In describing a garden implement used for digging purposes he calls it a spade, and he begins it with a big "S." And in a series of meetings which have aroused Chicago's southern environs to a dazzling white heat, he has brought guys of amusement and approbation from certain churchgoers and unchurchlike language from other members of the First Baptist Church, Hammond, where he is conducting a series of revivals.

Some of the sentiments expressed by the preacher which made his audience breathe hard were:

Of some young male members of the church choir—"Brainless, white-livered apes, who ought to be in an insane asylum."

Of the young women choir members—"A disabling card-playing bench, when I don't want to disabling anybody."

Of Rev. W. H. Jones, former pastor of the church—"A humbug, who advocated humbuggery."

Of the University of Chicago Theological School faculty—"Sufferers from fatty enlargement of the eye, who are at the head, not the sheep."

Of Presbyterians—"The Presbyterian church is full of dancers and hell is full of Presbyterians."

Of the Hammond unemployed—"Beer swillers, who spent their earnings in beer and now seek charity."

Of Hammond—"The only difference between hell and Hammond is that there's a river in Hammond."

Evangelist Shannon began stirring things up about fourteen seconds after he entered the pulpit of the church Wednesday evening. Three minutes later twelve feminine members of the choir were hurrying from the church in an angry and chattering group and about three minutes later an equal number of male escorts, using explosive language, joined them on the outside.

A few staid members of the church also quietly followed the angry choir members, but a large majority remained to hear the verbal fireworks.

When he had taken his place in the pulpit Evangelist Shannon faced Choir Master E. W. Hoyt.

"Before we start," he said, "I want to say that if you have any of that dancing, card-playing bunch who pretend to be church members up there I don't want them on this platform.

"Let them go home, where they belong! They are bound for hell and have no business here. We don't want to be a church member. I know of one convert who wanted to join the Baptist church and he allowed to keep up his dancing. He was told he could not and said the Presbyterian church was full of dancers.

"Yes, I told him, 'and hell is full of Presbyterians, with their feet hanging out of the windows.'

"Some of there men members of the choir are as bad. I have seen some of them—brainless, white-livered apes, whiffing on their cigarettes, a strip of tobacco with fire on one end and fool on the other. I know them—half baked fellows, dancing and drinking, and who pretend to be church members. They ought to be in an insane asylum."

As the preacher paused there was another hurried exodus of choir members and the audience nervously braced itself for the next assault.

Rev. W. H. Jones, now a pastor at Belvidere, Ill., received it.

"They have an athletic club here which is not far removed from it. Dances and frivolity are a part of it. It was organized by a pastor of this church. He is a humbug and this is humbuggery. This is not church work and the work of teachers of the gospel.

"Some of the teachers should be ashamed of themselves. Look at the University of Chicago Theological School. They used to pray in the upper rooms there. Now they pray in the supper-rooms.

"They are after the loaves and fishes. It is the fleece, not the wool, they seek, these sufferers from fatty enlargement of the ego. They have no revivals, of course not. They couldn't have them.

"I'm going to get out of Hammond Sunday. I am tired of the beer guzzlers and beer swillers of this place. The only difference between hell and Hammond is that there is a river in Hammond. I have heard of your people starving about here. Who are they? Beer swillers who spent their money and now demand charity.

"It is the same all the way through here. You license the saloons to make the poor sinn and then turn around and tax decent people to keep their victims from starving to death.

"There is no use in patting a rattlesnake on the head and telling it to be good; hit it on the head with a club."

While the attendants at the revival meeting have much to say about the sensational speeches of the revivalists, the church officials were reticent yesterday.

"The church officials regretted him; not I," said Rev. J. E. Sharp, pastor of the church. "I do not care to comment upon his talks."

Officials of the church are said to have held a conference yesterday and planned a curb upon the utterances of the evangelists. Among the prominent members of the church, who listened in astonishment to the speech of the evangelists, were Thomas Hammond, president of the Commercial Bank, Professor W. A. Hill principal of the high school, and John A. Wolf.

Evangelist Shannon's uncensored comments upon his hosts and audiences have stirred up much church activity in cities he has visited recently and nonchurchgoers frequently have taken part.

Residents of Terre Haute demanded that he be ordered to leave the city, and in Garrett, Ind., where comparatively few people are "Slaguation leads to damnation in churches as well as other things."

LAKE SURVEY.

Government Chart of Straits of Mackinac for Mariners.

The United States Lake Survey office of Detroit has issued a new edition of the chart of the Straits of Mackinac on a scale of a little better than half an inch to the mile.

The original surveys in this important vessel roadway were made more than fifty years ago. The recent work of the lake survey steamer Search brought up a number of dangerous obstructions, and these are shown in this new edition.

The attention of mariners is called to the lone rock southeast of Manitou Payment Shoal, and to the shoal water off the mouth of the Piercont River and off Point Aux Chenes.

The new shoals in the vicinity of Cheboygan and off Cordwood Point are important. On account of the discovery of these last shoals, the sailing course through the straits has been moved to the northward, and this has changed the Lake Huron and Lake Michigan courses converging here.

Many names along the north shore have been brought up to date and many added. The chart shows more compass courses than the last edition. The marginal latitude and longitude scales are divided into minutes. A table of magnetic variation has been added.

The change of price to 15 cents is working toward uniformity of selling price.

Eighth Grade Examination.

The annual examination for eighth grade graduation will be held on Thursday and Friday, May 7, 8, 1908, beginning at 8:30 a. m. standard time, at the following places.

Against moment and the chance was available against time again the broad golden far-shot sunset from the west in the east where the confederates were crawling. In the course of the sunset light there would be figures—the figure of the girl. Even at that distance they would distinguish the outlines enough which she usually wore and the blue-black dress, the hat trimmed in the shape, and the lower part of her face to pink pure her lines the handkerchief. But the habitual of more shrinkage and preening out and the thinness of the hands and the bright curves which he to present to go back. Then, with a quick wonder gesture, closed the door behind her. The light was so bright that Sir Edward could see the wonder in the house, and that the appearance would be.

What an sign of around before they heard her footsteps. Also came very slowly, suffering one foot painfully before other, as if afraid of falling over something in the dark. Sir Edward Cuthbert stopped altogether, looking round, as shade, in some of her hesitation. At the instant the man shone out from behind a bend, and they saw the dark figure a short distance off. The light shifted to one side, and there was the girl who came rapidly towards it. As she approached the light, Cuthbert observed that she was the first on the ground, for she slowly and by gave once more and looked on the long road. The clouds were overtaking the sun, and the light was getting dimmer.

"I can see by your face," said Eva in a whisper, grasping his father's wrist to his excitement.

The old man said nothing, but he peered through the darkness with eager straining eyes.

"There she is, standing out a little from the rest," the young merchant said, pointing with a quivering finger. "Not near enough for him to reach her."

"Yes, no doubt, and he is coming now," the other said hoarsely. "Have you see him, standing along the ground?"

"I see him," replied the other in the same subdued, concerned voice. "And he has seen us, and he sees us again! Is he close behind her? She is looking the other way."

A slim cay of light shot down between the clouds. It fell on the group, and the figures stood out hard and black, that of the unconscious girl and of the man who crouched like a beast of prey behind her. He made a step forward, which brought him within a yard of her. She may have heard the heavy footfall above the shrill cry of the gulls, for she turned suddenly and faced him. At the same instant she was struck down with a crushing blow. There was no time for a prayer, no time for a scream, for she turned half and fell in a silent swoon in all the pride of her youthful beauty, the next left her a pale battered senseless wreck. The navvy had turned his head at the sound of the blow and the sight of the fall with the cry of the young run out from their place of concealment. They were crawling over the rocks, his business in his hand.

"Not even a groan," he said. "What do you think of that?"

Girdlestone wrung his hand and gave a prolonged warning. "Shall I help the lantern?" he asked.

"Can't! Extra pair of handcuffs."

"I had no idea that you were so fatal-hearted, my son," the merchant recited. "However, I know the way to the gate—all enough to go there blindfold. What a comfort it is to know that there is no blood about! The blow resembled of a stick over a bullet."

"You're correct there, gentlemen," Hart said, approvingly.

"Will you kindly carry one end and I'll take the other, I'll get home as fast and mind because I know the way best. The train will pass in less than half an hour, and we have long to wait. Within that time every clue and detection will have gone."

Girdlestone raised up the head of the murdered girl, and Hart took her feet. Eva walked behind as though he were in some dreadful dream. He had fully recognized the necessity for the murder but he had never before realized how ghastly the deed would be. Already he had begun to repent that he had ever suggested it. Then came thoughts of the splendid prospects of the fortunate business, which could only be saved from disaster by the consummate deed. He could be, with his luxurious tastes, bear the squalor and poverty which would be his if were the firm to fail. Better a rope and a long drop than such a life as that! All these considerations threaded his brain as he stumbled along the slippery footpath which led through the forest to the wooden gate.

CHAPTER XXIII.

When Tom and the major arrived at Waverlon station, the latter in a breathless condition, they found the tramus waiting for them with his two fellow-criminals. The gentleman of Nibbles' profession was somewhat fall and thin, with a long dark coal bushbeard about the lower chin, which showed signs of roving at the roots every time and there. He grinned hale fell over his collar behind, and had a sheer hole in the crown, he wore a hat and stuck into the front of its rim and the other side. He had, though retaining the pallid in which his ancestors had lived for ages in the streets of his native Russia, when the people had their noses, and drawing was no more, the spirit of his worn attire there was something noble and refined about the man. He had been when tramus ever introduced him to the major and Tom, would have stood his ground in Russian Round life well he had a coarse strong face with, long a pair of denim eyeglasses. These he fixed upon the sunline some and looked a good deal at the gentlemen who he had come to serve.

Before, Tom was a stout, darkeyed clean shaven fellow, quick and energetic in his movements, having the appearance of a cab than of a Tramus. He seemed to be full of sensibility, and as he had to be full in valuable English, how much the major he was to be able to do a very happy he was to be able to do a very big job on the road and allow kindness to play in our cold colonage and prepared patriot, Vat Hammer. Indeed both of the men showed great deference to the Hammer, and the major began to perceive that his friend was a very exalted individual in aristocratic circles. He lined back of the two footmen, and simply faced himself upon having their company in the matter on hand.

"I took was in store for the expedition however. The inquiry at the ticket office then found that there was no train for minutes of two hours, and then it was a slow one, which would not land them at all eight o'clock in Bedlestock. At the office of information Tom Hinsdale fell a prey to the anxiety and agitated the clerks, raving and beseeching the officials to run a special, to be ready at eight. This, however, could by no means be done, owing to the press of Saturday traffic. There was nothing for it but to wait. The three foreigners went off in search of something to eat, and having found a restaurant, and also they discussed chops and feasted royally at Van Hammer's expense. Major Tomes Chatterbock remained with the young man, who constantly refused to leave the station. The major knew of a snug little corner out far off where he could have sat in the sun very comfortably, but he could not bring himself to desert his companion in such a crisis.

Indeed, it was well that day that young Hinsdale had good friends at his back. His appearance was so strange and wild that the unsuspicious friend took a long sinister look at him. His eyes were open and wandering, and he kept fingering the accounted chords and fretted roughly

JUGGLED HIS EYE.

The Trick by Which Lord Wolseley Conquered an Arab.

The loss of an eye never kept some blood Lord Wolseley in good stead. It seemed impossible to get any information of the enemy's strength and the forces under the command of Arabi Pasha. At length an Arab was caught near one of the outposts. Naturally expecting that he would be sent to give a good deal of information, he was taken before Lord Wolseley, who questioned him. The man, however, refused to speak.

Seeing that it was useless to continue to pply him with questions, the commander in chief resolved to use strategy. "It is no use your refusing to answer me," he said to the man. "I am a wizard, and at a single word I can destroy you and your masters. To prove this to you I will take out my eye, throw it up into the air, catch it and put it back into my head."

Suiting the action to the word, Lord Wolseley removed his glass eye, threw it into the air, caught it and put it back into the empty socket. That demonstration was sufficient to convert the Arab. A man who could do such a miracle was a wizard indeed and was to be propitiated, not angered. He capitulated, without further demur, and the information he gave he said to have led to Arabi's defeat.

ECCENTRIC PLANCHE.

Why the Famous Critic's Hands Were Still Soiled After a Bath.

A correspondent of the Boston Herald says that a remark attributed to the late Sotby Pendleonne was long religiously by the famous and eccentric theatrical and dramatic critic, Gustave Planche, who died in Paris in September, 1867. For a long time it was thought that he kept to the public aspects, and he himself took pleasure in giving credit to this report.

"Where are you lodging?" some one asked him.

"I don't lodge," he replied; "I perch."

"And where?"

"Champs Elysees, third tree to the right."

Another anecdote of Planche is that, being once invited to dine with a celebrated actress, Adhiade of Mme. Dorval, he arrived before the company.

"My goodness, Planche," cried the hostess, "what a figure you cut! Go take a bath, I beg. Here is a ticket."

He returned in an hour's time as clean as when he set out. "You unhappy man, you have not taken the bath!"

"By my faith, I have!"

"Look at your hands."

"Ah, that is because I had a book while in the water."

The Thief Trackers.

A curious profession among the Bedouin is that of the "thief trackers." Being without padlocks or stables and their animals always more or less at liberty, theft of stock would appear to be an easy and frequent matter. Such is however, has its little company of "trackers," and it would be either a bold or an ignorant man indeed who ventured to interfere with an Arab's live stock. There was one instance in which a camel stolen from a camp near Beneitih was, after weeks of labor, successfully tracked to the Sudan, where the beast was recaptured and summary vengeance wreaked upon the robbers. Selected for natural ability and trained from boyhood to discriminate between each animal's footprint, this faculty becomes so highly developed that a particular horse's or camel's trail is unerringly picked up from amongst the thousands of impressions on the dusty highway.

An Aggravating Boy.

Lord Clarendon exhibited brilliant qualities in him and doted. At the same time he was by no means a quiet, studious boy when he attended the famous public school. One of the mathematical masters then told how Clarendon gave him more trouble than any boy he ever taught. "He was incessantly playing the fool and 'ragging' and apparently paid no attention to what I was teaching. But when I made him more especially aggravating was that, whenever I came down on him suddenly and asked him to go through some difficult problem that I had been explaining, he never failed to give me a perfectly lucid and satisfactory proof. And very often he was the only boy in the class who could."—Everson's Weekly.

Moral Idiots.

A good many people still hold the notion that all persons are equally good by nature and might be equally good actually that they but the will to be so. They fall to see that men are born with all degrees of moral capacities and incapacities and some of them wholly lacking in that record, just as they are born with all degrees of intellectual endowment and sense of them with none whatever. A LEARNED LUNATIC.

Alexander Crummen, the Compiler of the Bible Concordance.

Alexander Crummen, the preservering and painstaking compiler of the famous Concordance to the Bible, was appointed bookseller to the queen of George II. by Sir Robert Walpole. The Concordance which has conferred celebrity on his name was published and dedicated to Queen Caroline in 1737. He was permitted to present a copy of it in person to her majesty, who, he said, smiled upon him and assured him she was much obliged to him. But Crummen's days afterward, and Crummen did not reap the benefit of the queen's appreciation which he had anticipated. He prepared a second edition twenty-four years afterward and dedicated it to her grandson, George III. For this and a third edition he said he 1700 he reaped a reward of ingratitude.

Crummen was a very eccentric character and was thrice placed in private lunatic asylums. He designated himself "Alexander the Corrector" and also the "Corrector of Morals." His claim to the latter title consisting in his stopping all persons whom he met in public places on Sundays and admonishing them to go home and keep the Sabbath day holy. He was a great believer in the distribution of tracts and spent a great part of his means in this way.

It seems difficult to believe that an eccentric man of this sort should have his name associated with such a remarkably painstaking book as his concordance undoubtedly is, as it must have cost an enormous amount of labor to its compilation, but it was probably the severity of his occupation that unhinged his mind. He died at Chancery street, Islington, on Nov. 1, 1770.

AN OCEAN VOYAGE.

Give of the Things It Teaches Is the Value of System.

"I wish," said the head of a large business house, "that every man who distresses his friends and associates by his lack of method could be told off to take a trip or a succession of trips on the sea. He would learn something, like to. There's a force in example, you know, and the effects of shipshape conditions would make themselves felt sooner or later. I don't mean to say that a revolution in character would follow any such experience, but with the uniformity of proper ways to do any thing there would be some alteration for the better.

"Oh, yes, I know, there are certain men and women who are born to disorder, as you might say, and who couldn't be helped by any course of treatment. They are the unfortunates of business and professional life, that's all. But for the immense, the thoughtless, those who never have acquired the habit of system, the sea is involved in a most sensible plaster for the rebellowing of approved system in routine matters, a sea voyage, with its methodical, precise adjustment of time, its method, in a word, must prove a most beneficial thing. It's funny that when you hear so much about the restlessness of ocean travel so few realize the immense regularity of the life, its system, its evident adaptation of means to ends, constitutes such a large factor in bringing about this result. And the principle can be applied on shore."—New York Press.

Diamond Cut Diamond.

Once upon a time there were in Paris two papers, the Hazor and the Scorpion, which were always going for each other with great ferocity. Every week people bought the Hazor to read how it cut at the Scorpion and the Scorpion to learn how it stung the Hazor.

A certain philanthropist felt pained to see such violence, so he invited the two editors to dine in the hope that over good fare he could make peace between them. At the appointed time one lean, melancholy man presented himself and was ushered in. After an interval, as no other guest appeared, the host demanded:

"Why I ask are you the editor of the Scorpion?"

"Both," said the sad eyed man.

"Sir," said the irate parent as he was quickly entered the parlor, "what do you mean by kissing my daughter?"

"Excuse me," replied the poor lun otherwise lamed young man, "but I desired to show my appreciation of your daughter's freshness, and kisses are the only things I can afford to give her at the present stage of the game."—Detroit Tribune.

COURTESY IN THE ORIENT.

An Attempted Innovation That Did Not Meet With Favor.

It is not always easy to force upon a people new customs, even if they be advanced principles, in the face of long established tradition. Lad; Burton discovered this truth when she attempted to introduce Turkish bath houses into the orient. She tells of her experience in the bath of Syria." The incident occurred at one of her own receptions.

It is the rigour every time coffee, tea or sherbet comes in for every fresh relay of visitors that I should take it with these and drink dint. When I first arrived I used to get up as a matter of course, make the tea and coffee and carry it round. The dragomans would sit lazily and smoke.

One day I asked them to get up and help me. They were pleased to do so and willingly dismissed the retainers to any of the Europeans, man or woman, but not to their own ladies, who blushed, begged their pardon and were quite confused when I made it known that this attention was for them as well as for others. The women looked appalingly at me and stood up, crying not to be served. One man who was really in love with his wife, a beautiful creature, gave her a tongue as if it were a good joke, with a little sneer, blue hint, bissed his hand and begged his pardon.

I felt quite indignant with the men for so behaving to their wives, mothers and sisters, but one said to me, "Pray, Mrs. Burton, do not teach our women things they do not know about and never saw?"

After that I hold my tongue, but I felt in my heart that with Europeans it was the height of bad taste not to wait on any woman.

HAD HIS REVENGE.

But the Heartless Hotel Man Got in Work on the Last Laugh.

A hotel proprietor in Kansas City once told of an amusing incident connected with his stay at his house of a rural politician.

The politician had come to the hotel for but one day, and he had taken his dinner elsewhere with friends. When on coming to pay his bill he found himself charged with a day's board, dinner and all, he protested vigorously. It was explained to him that the American plan was based strictly on time and that if he chose to eat elsewhere it was his own loss. The man, however, refused to be pacified and paid the bill under protest. Some to every one's surprise, he asked if dinner were "still on." Upon being informed that it lasted until 9 in the evening he exclaimed:

"I've eaten one dinner, but I'm going to get every cent's worth out of this house if I suffer all the torments of dyspepsia."

He then rushed into one of the dining rooms, seized a bill of fare and enjoyed everything he could think of. When he finally reached his third pie waiter handed him a check for $8.35.

"What's that for?" he demanded.

"Your dinner, sir."

"But I have already paid for my dinner in my bill," pleaded the unfortunate man. "I am staying here on the American plan."

"Then you should have gone into the other dining room," said the waiter. "This is the European plan cafe."—Harper's Weekly.

His Lecture on Job.

"I dunno what dey call Job a patient man for," said Brother Dickey. "Mass of all de growlers I ever heard tell on he sho' was de growlerest. But he sho' did have enough to make him growl—dat he did! De Bible sez, 'Looky yer, Job, you in my power now, an' I gwine ter 'flict you wif a few licks.' An' Job says, 'All right; I kin stan' it if you kin.' But de bliss cose—yessir, he broke out so thick an' fast dat Job says, 'Looky yer, nuss, dese bliss is bliss—dis is epidjuss, sho' enough! An' he ketch so dat he had no scratch left! Dat was a good bend, fer de devil git in a high win' an' blow down Job's house, an' dat mus' 'a been hard on ol' Job ef he sho' was a' he say, 'Looky yer. I bargain fer bliss, fer I didn't want no horrible bliss! I bargain fer good measure!"—Frank Stanton in Atlanta Constitution.

A Puzzler.

Solomon was fain to admit that there were three things too wonderful for him, yea, four which he knew not. The way of an eagle in the air, the way of a serpent upon a rock, the way of a ship in the midst of the sea and the way of a man with a maid." Had Solomon lived till the day and generation, says the Philadelphia's Ledger, he would have added a fifth puzzler to his list, the way of an opulent company with a prepaid package.

FLATTERY NOT IN MISS LINE.

Where Mr. Spooner Lost Out for Ever with Miss Flutterby.

"That's a portrait of your grandmother, is she looked when she was a young lady, is it? How strongly it resembles you, Miss Flutterby."

"You say that only to flatter me, Mr. Spooner. Grandma was quite a beauty and everybody knows that I make no pretensions of that kind."

"I assure you that flattery is far from my thought, Miss Flutterby. The family resemblance is striking. I've often known cases of this kind. There were two sisters I was acquainted with, when I was a boy. They looked wonderfully alike, just as that portrait looks like you, and yet one of them was as beautiful as a poet's dream and the other was dreadfully—that is, I mean, she was a good deal plainer than the other was dreadfully—that is, what I mean, she was lacking in that—attractiveness, you know, that constitutes—what a lovely frame this portrait has, hasn't it?"—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

JIM ONCE MORE UNSHACKLED

Probably Mrs. Jones' Views Coincided with Her Husband's.

One day a tall, gaunt woman, with rope-colored hair and an expression of great fervency, strode into the office of a county clerk in West Virginia.

"Yes sir he permit that keeps the marriage books, ain't yer?" she demanded.

"What book do you wish to see, madam?" asked the public clerk.

"Do you find out in Jim Jones was married?"

Search of the records disclosed the name of James Jones, for whom a marriage license had been issued five years before.

"Married Elizabeth Mott, didn't he?" asked the woman.

"The license was issued for a marriage with Alice Elizabeth Mott."

"Well, young man, I'm Elizabeth. I reckon I ought ter know jim an' I. I guess that Jim has escaped."—Harper's Weekly.

An Overvounted Virtue.

S. I. Kimball, general superintendent of the life saving service, said of an applicant for a certain post:

"The man was recommended for his steadiness. Now steadiness is a virtue, especially in life saving, but goes none too far. Whenever I think of it I think of an old lady I used to know.

"Mrs. Madden, a gentlemen once said to this old lady, your neighbor, Barker Blading, has applied to me for work. Is he steady?"

Mrs. Madden threw up her hands.

"Steady, is he? she said. 'Sure if he was any slumber he'd be dead.'"

Pitch-Iners and Crawl-Outers.

There are two classes of people in the world, the Pitchiners and the Crawlouters. We do not commonly use the term, yet everyone will recognize the faithfulness of the classification. Test it. Present a good cause, a hard duty, a difficult proposition (everything those days is a "proposition") to a group of men. They will drive like oil and water. There will be a minority who will discuss the opportunity and plan to do it, the majority most likely will crawl out.—Zion's Herald.

Had Hoped for Real Money.

Mr. Heavyweight, said the minister, "is willing to subscribe $10,000 for a new church, provided we can get other subscriptions making the same amount."

"Yet you seem disappointed," said the wife.

"Yes, I was in hopes he would contribute $100 in cash."—Town and Country.

ELECTRIC CAR KILLS FIVE.

Crushes Into Funeral Carriage Occupied by Women.

Four women and the driver of the funeral carriage in which they were returning to Chicago from their bridesmistress' grave were killed Wednesday afternoon at West Madison street and the Desplaines road, near Desplaines, when a train of the Aurora, Elgin & Chicago Electric Railroad crashed into the side of a funeral carriage at 40½ miles an hour. The carriage was cut in two and the rear half, with two of its occupants, was carried 300 feet along the track. The horses became alarmed by the noise of the train, the driver bolting from the box, but receiving fatal injuries. Thomas Ryan, who had occupied the forward seat, were killed instantly.

The dead are: Mrs. Mary Ryan, aged about 60, found under the wreckage, with which their bodies had been carried for a mile and one-half.

Several carriages were in line on the return trip from the Hillside cemetery, that which was wrecked being the second. The one preceding it passed the tracks in safety at the crossing. The driver, Newman, evidently had no position of the speed of the train which is approaching westbound. He whipped his horses and they jumped across the track. To the occupants in carriages following the car seemed to leap forward as the horses reached the track.

There was a crash and shrieks from the occupants had an entirely from Newman. The train with 150 people, propelled by the front of the motor car, appeared to pass in a flash, so New man and two of his victims were buried in the air.

As the train sped by, mourners issued from the other carriages and congregated at the scene. Never did the horrible character of the carnage was seen to be in flames, due, it is believed, to ignition from the wreck.

Newman, who found three feet from where the carriage had been struck, was unconscious, and remained so until he died.

FOR A RUSSIAN REPUBLIC.

The Man Who Has Called on the Czar to Abdicate.

The man who is the author of the telegram to the Czar of Russia urging that he abdicate in favor of a republic, whose personal surveillance and trying to harm the Czar, is a native of Russia, is professing a moderate form of democracy, some of his friends say, but others say he is a fanatic who believes in the principles ever to be realized in Russia. He was born in New York, and is the only son of a Russian Jew, who is the agent of Russian Independence. His ambition is the consummation of a life work. He has served notice on Czar Nicholas to dishonor and make room for the United States of Russia, but so far the authorities have no notification of a plan to make his inherited right to rule Nicholas claims to represent a central committee who headquarters at Moscow. He is trying to raise $5,000,000 for the cause of freedom by issuing "liberty bonds" signed by himself as the only official signatory.

Another Notorious Gun.

Another desperado has joined the discharge of all kinds of firearms minions in new Mexico, the fifth one to be killed within recently reported. This is credited to Oliver Lee, a native of Missouri, who is different from that of Mat Lee. He can be carried about in a trunk or in a suitcase or in a woman's dress. It consists of a series of six shots, which are fired from the hip and which pile on inch on to the length of the barrel, and the bullets, varying in size, increasing in diameter from the smallest to the largest.

NEW ANARCHY CHECK URGED BY PRESIDENT

Writes Congress Further Legislation Is Needed in Work of Suppression.

BONAPARTE MAKES REPORT.

Asserts Postmaster-General May Exclude from Mails Papers Promoting Assassination.

In one of the strongest messages which he has yet transmitted to Congress, President Roosevelt called the attention of that body to the necessity for further legislation on the subject of anarchy. He said: "The anarchistic in the course of humanity, opposed to all mankind, and this is a deeper degree of criminality than any other." With the message he transmitted a report reviewing the legal phases of the question by Attorney General Bonaparte. The message of the President follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: I transmit herewith a letter from the Department of Justice which explains itself. The recent Congress I had the existing statutes give the President the power to prohibit the Postmaster General from being used as an instrument in the commission of crime; that is, to prohibit the use of the mails for the advocacy of murder, arson and treason; and I shall act at once under this authority.

Unquestionably, however, there should be further legislation in this matter. When congress will the supreme duty upon congress does not strike me misgivings. The anarchists are the enemies of all government and all mankind, and this is a deeper degree of criminality than any other. The anarchist is the enemy of the Supreme Being of the universe. Speech and publication in the course of human progress have been the means of bringing about a great number of improvements in the world, and there are many Mormons from Utah in New York, who come here to educate their children.

As the result of all this effort there is a perceptible increase in the amount of anarchistic propaganda in the metropolis. Formerly the church had a mere handful of followers in Gotham, but now it has a membership of over 250.

In giving the reply to notice a statement Speaker Cannon and a delegation from the Interdenominational Club brought "Know all, be unafraid" into Illinois to cause by yesterday.

The speaker said to pay automobiles were imported into the United States by way of New York less month to the year ago, a period during March of last year. He said the speaker's office fulfilling of the charged a stiff service fulfilling of the

MORMONS ACTIVE.

Sect Is Carrying on Well-Directed Campaign in New York.

Mormon missionaries are carrying on an active propaganda in New York City and are meeting with success in proselyting members of other religious denominations. Hundreds of converts have been made in the greater city, half being on Manhattan Island and half in Brooklyn. Most of them are said to be engaging laborers and improvers and women and are making a business transaction in some quarters. Especially is this so on the upper West Side, where the women themselves with trying to induce persons of the religious to the Mormon faith. Some are trying to the business of influential citizens.

The fact that some of the converts are Japanese and Chinese from Japan in home gives these missionaries a reputation of being liberal, and they do not that dwell upon the peculiar tenets of their faith. These converts are very well educated and able to converse intelligently on a wide range of topics. After they now obtain a foothold they leave one of the books they say they are any time after they then have very an opportunity of reading it. In addition to these regular Mormon adherents there are many Mormons from Utah in New York, who come here to educate their children.

As the result of all this effort there is a perceptible increase in the amount of anarchistic propaganda in the metropolis. Formerly the church had a mere handful of followers in Gotham, but now it has a membership of over 250.

FAILURES BREAK ALL RECORDS.

Insolvencies During First Quarter of 1908 Number 815.

R. G. Dun & Co's quarterly review of business failures in the United States for the first three months of 1908 says:

Commercial failures in the United States numbered 4,576 in the first quarter of 1908, with liabilities of $75,000,101. Of this this is the heaviest mortality for the corresponding months of any year of record, there is a slight improvement as compared with the last three months of 1907, and many districts other than the first of earlier years have recorded heavier losses.

"Manufacturing defaults during the first quarter were 1,219, or 26.6 per cent against 670 in the same month last year, with liabilities of $29,256,675, against with $13,720,057. There were 2,954 trading failures with $45,743,426, against 2,041 in 1907, when the amount involved was $25,522,943. Other commercial failures were 403 in number and $[illegible] in amount, against 34 failures, for $[illegible] in the previous year.

"Banking failures now rise above the unusual and involved ten times as much money, 59 institutions closing their doors with liabilities of $[illegible], against 12 similar failures last year, when the amount involved was $[illegible]. At the same time manufacturing failures exceeded the corresponding months of any year since the preceding quarter, particularly the larger business, this were most far reaching in the effect on general business, resulting in the failures of [illegible] in the number of failures, and the average amount of liabilities for the first quarter each year since 1895 are given below:

Year.	No.	Liabilities.	Average.
1908	4,576	$75,000,101	$16,393
1907	3,152	63,844,990	20,255
1906	2,192	29,192,565	13,318

Other commercial	403	2,000,000
Total	4,576	$75,000,101

Trading failures were heavy in the five large central States, liabilities far exceeding those of any other division, as large as in the same months last year, with nearly double the number of failures in the South and Southwest. Western and Pacific divisions, as large in Michigan, the relative increase was 40 per cent, Pacific divisions over 200 per cent. Every State in the section also reported a larger number of failures, the increase in Illinois being almost 150. That State also reported two large banking failures and three failed two large banking failures. Other sections were four in Ohio, although the amount of money involved was much less.

"The number of failures by States for the first quarter this year and 1907 and liabilities both years are compared below:

THE WEEKLY HISTORIAN

COST OF LIVING IS DOWN.

Prices of Commodities Decrease but Are Still Far from Bottom.

Its cheapness is not the only thing that has been thirty-three months. That, at least, is the comforting assurance just announced by Bradstreet's.

It was a year ago this month when the highest general level of prices for foodstuffs, textiles, coal and other commodities was reached. Since then the prices dropped 12.5 per cent, the decrease being fairly evenly distributed from month to month.

Since have been some thirty increases, but Bradstreet's records show that these products, including foodstuffs and textiles, cost less than last March. If the table of prices that are higher, some are sugar, tea, potatoes, apples, wheat, corn, oats and barley, soft coal and petroleum.

The low price average of this month, however, is only comparative, and if the drop is limited to 1 per cent a month, so for the year just, more than 11 per cent, it leaves prices far from the lows reached prior average is reached.

Prices are still 40 per cent higher than the low level recorded on July 1, 1898.

In averaging fluctuations of prices Bradstreet's uses an index figure representing a compilation of costs of thirty-one commodities. The record goes back sixteen years.

Prices for thirteen staples show that ten out of the group decreased during February, one remained unchanged and two went higher.

The table group showed the greatest weakness, with provisions a close second. Cotton goods were about advanced and fruits remained unchanged.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

Supt. Maxwell of the New York City Board of Education, in his annual report urges the formation of a department of hygiene. Such a department, he thinks, should be under the direction of a medical man, who would rank as an assistant superintendent, and who should have charge of the medical inspectors to examine all the children in the public schools at least once a year, and a sufficient number of nurses in visit the homes of children who are absent from school. He says that nowhere in the world is the city in the New York is the greatest city in the world, and yet it has the smallest amount of sleep. Owing to conditions in the tenements and in some of the public schools as well as many other conditions, the children are deprived vitality, defective sight, defective teeth and other ailments due to the lack of sufficient sleep. The report says that there are 154,000 pupils in the public schools of New York who, they are backward in their lessons because they are sleepy.

The National Civic Federation has made arrangements to send full or four-page articles on the subject of England, Scotland, Ireland and the colonies to 1,000 newspapers in the United States, covering practically in foreign countries the work of the Federation in the discussions of a similar expedition of England, which is to be the first of its kind. The Federation has sent 500 copies of the Chicago Conference to the leading men of the world, including Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University, who has appointed chairman of an advisory committee to carry out the work. In this connection it may be noted that Mr. Butler has accepted the invitation of the University of Copenhagen to deliver three lectures on the Kant Foundation, the subject matter of the lectures to be "Some Aspects of American Civilization." He will leave for Denmark in August, returning in time for the opening of the college year.

Plant Food for Sugar Beets.

M. Saillard, director of the laboratory of the French Sugar Makers' Association, has conducted a series of experiments, extending over a period of five years, upon the sugar beet. The work was conducted in all parts of the French Sugar Beet regions and some of his conclusions are: (1) The beets which are richest in sugar, are poorest in soda. He thinks that in many cases too much nitrate of soda has been employed. The soda tends to decrease the sugar content. (2) That in the majority of cases the use of from 130 to 160 pounds of sulfate of muriate of potash per acre was profitable. In addition to this the beet requires available nitrogen and phospheric acid. (3) That the beets should receive per acre from 130 to 160 pounds of muriate or sulfate of potash, from 250 to 450 pounds per acre of acid phosphate, and the equivalent of the nitrogen in from 175 to 250 pounds per acre of nitrate of soda, part, at least, of this nitrogen may be in the form of blood, or ammonic sulfate. That there is no economy in using less than from 130 to 160 pounds of potash salts, as this is the element that principally favors the elaboration of the sugar in the beet.

The French use their fertilizer material separately to a large extent, while the American practice is to use the ready mixed goods. The amounts recommended above would be the equivalent of from 6 to 900 pounds per acre of a fertilizer containing about 1 per cent of nitrogen, 7 per cent of phosphoric acid at 10 per cent of potash.

In the sugar beet region of Michigan and Wisconsin the use of fertilizer has increased very rapidly and the formulas are not very different from the above, with the exception of the nitrogen, the Americans using only about one half as much nitrogen as is recommended by the French. This, perhaps, is to be expected because the American lands have been under cultivation for a much shorter period of time and their supply of nitrogen is, perhaps, somewhat greater.

It is interesting to notice that the American formulas and the French recommends are very much alike in regard to the amounts of phosphoric acid and potash required, and the extensive experiments in Michigan last year which were made with a 2 7 10 formula indicate that this formula increases both the yield and the sugar content in the majority of cases. The Michigan experiments were based upon the use of 500 pounds per acre of this formula.

NORWOOD NEWS.

Letter to Mr. D. F. Meech,

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: The cheapest thing in the way of sending anything over the world is a postage stamp; and the cheapest way to shed water is paint.

Not whitewash paint. Do you happen to know—it don't belong to your business to know about paint, you know do you happen to know that most of the makers of paint stuff it out with lime and clay and sand and water and all?

They do stuff it out in the can; but not on the house. They make more gallons to sell or to buy; more money to pay for paint; more money to pay for putting it on; a good deal more money to pay for putting it on; but no more beauty; more rust; decay; disappoint; le.?.

Devoe is your paint, because it's all paint, no sham and full measure.

Yours truly

—The ladies of the W. R. C., will give a supper and concert in the Bank hall Tuesday, May 5th for the purpose of raising money to help defray the expenses of our decoration day celebration. It is well known that the ladies expend both time and money every spring in cleaning off neglected graves and otherwise making the cemetery more beautiful. As this is a work we are all more or less interested in, let us help by our liberal patronage.

—R. M. A. Johnston, plumber, has a new ad. in this issue.

Regular meeting of Baxter Post G. A. R. 2 p. m. Saturday May 2d.

—The last party of the Hotel Bartlett series will occur Friday night of this week.

—Mrs. Ferguson, wife of Presiding Elder Ferguson, died at her home in Traverse City Sunday.

—Mrs. E. D. Hines and her daughter Isabel, left Tuesday for Bramwells, W. Va., to visit relatives.

—Mrs. Hudson O. Smith, of Owosso, is here for a few weeks, visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Smith.

—The X. L. Produce Co. creamery is shipping butter to St. James, and recently shipped 250 pounds to the Traverse City asylum.

—The tug Cisco, which went to Beaver Island to fish last week, broke the steam chest to her cylinder Friday, and is laid up for repairs.

—The U. S. Weather Bureau storm warning tower, erected on the bluff back of Park avenue, was formally accepted Saturday morning.

—S. M. Rose has taken a submarine diving job at South Haven, to repair the Lake Michigan intake pipe in that city. He will be absent all this week —The Harold, a Booth Co. tug, was in port Monday. She will run between Charlevoix, Old Mission, Northport, Leland, Good Harbor and Glen Arbor, picking up fish.

—It is reported on pretty good authority that Capt. Sam Rose, mayor of Charlevoix, will command the new boat that will soon come out as the State game and Fish Warden Lake Patrol.

—L. G. Smith, of Muskegon, who has a dredging contract at Boyne City, will, in about two weeks resume operations in the raising of the tug Wheeler, sunk in Pine Lake three years ago.

—The old county poor house at Ironton and a barn adjoining, the latter owned by R. A. Miller was destroyed by fire last Friday. The old poor house was owned by J. L. Newberry, of Petoskey.

—Mr. Stewart, in charge of the U. S. fish hatchery, finished planting the 25,000,000 whitefish and five million trout fry last Sunday. The hatchery is closed, and Mr. Stewart will return to Northville tomorrow.

—Mrs. Lucy Himebaugh, widow of the late M. Himebaugh, of Marion, died at the Banks home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry Ingalls, last Friday. Deceased was born in 1822, and was a pioneer of Marion township.

—The following is the monthly report of the books given out at the library as furnished by the librarian: Fiction, 333; juvenile fiction, 321; religion, 2; sociology, 8; natural science, 4; fine arts, 1; literature, 15; history, 9; travel, 5; biography, 3; total, 701; daily average, 87. Number of patrons enrolled during month 22; total number of patrons 602.

—Dr. J. A. Auld's eight acre fruit farm, on Garfield avenue, south terrace, is worth a Sunday afternoon walk to see. The Doctor has 600 apple trees and 300 peach trees, from one to three years old, some of the older ones having borne apples last year. It is a beautiful place of property, and will some day be a source of profit to its owner.

—The oratorical contest held in the Methodist church Wednesday evening, April 22, by the W. C. T. U., was in every way a success. The contestants were chosen from the Freshman class, as follows: Alice Madill, Marguerite O'Neill, Lynne Thomas, Douglas Nettleton and Frederica Hubbard. Miss Hubbard scored highest in number of points. The medal was presented by Prof. Woodley. The other contestants received a book each for their efforts. The Freshman class has a right to be pround.

—The Normal Class held an open Lyceum Tuesday evening, March 31. The girls of the Junior Class, with Miss Lombard, were invited to attend for the purpose of observing the drill in parliamentary law. One of the numbers on the program was a debate, the subject was, "Resolved that traveling is of more educational value than studying." The arguments on both sides were strong, but the judges decided in favor of the negative. A very fine talk on "The Life of Pestalozzie" was given by Grace Meggison, and was given without manuscript. After the program candy and pop corn were served. The pop corn was made by the different members of the class at home, and the candy was made on the gasoline stoved in the Normal room.

—The steamer Lou A. Cummings made her first Boyne City trip Thursday, and is now making one round trip per day, which will soon be increased to two.

—The steamer Fannie C. Hart was in port Wednesday afternoon of this week, bound north. The Fannie will run between Green Bay and the Soo via St. James, Charlevoix and Petoskey.

BANK CHANGE.

Shift of Stock Holdings in Charlevoix State Savings Bank and Change of Management.

A large block, and a majority of the stock, constituting the holdings of Fletcher E. Turrell, in the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, was yesterday sold to Mr. W. J. Rachow, formerly cashier of the Copomish Bank, of Copomish Mich. The transfer was made yesterday morning, and Mr. Rachow has assumed charge of the bank as cashier.

The new cashier comes to Charlevoix with an enviable record as a banker, and with the highest testimonials as a business man and gentleman. Mr. Rachow is rated among the larger corresponding banks as a most reliable and able bank, official, of long experience, and broad technical knowledge of the business.

Mr. Turrell retires from the bank as a matter of his own choice, to carry out plans of long standing, to engage in business in Chicago. Mr. Turrell retires with the confidence of our business men, and we are sure we speak the sentiments of this community in wishing him success in his new field of effort. Mr. and Mrs. Turrell will be missed from Charlevoix.

We are sure the new cashier, coming as he does with a record of integrity and social standing, will be welcomed by our people.

As an evidence of the standing of the bank, is the fact that the stock was sold at a price above par.

A Useful and Promising Industry.

Over in the alley near the intersection of State and Antrim streets, is a little manufactory that gives fair promise of developing into an industry of importance.

It is the place where Lee Howland makes cement building blocks. Supplied with modern appliances, including moulds of every form of plain and ornamental work, the shop is every day turning out work that finds it way in the channels of constructive improvement.

Howland's cement sidewalks have already acquired an excellent reputation all over Northern Michigan, and on nearly every street in Charlevoix may be found Howland's cement blocks—models of skilled workmanship and durability.

In the yard of the works are piled up hundreds of blocks, seasoning for use, but every day they are being taken away for building purposes.

JAIL BREAKERS.

Two Inmates of County Jail Almost Reach Freedom.

Duel and Cooley, prisoners bound over to circuit court from Boyne City, charged with forgery, almost gained their liberty Tuesday night, but they are both locked up in separate cells, where they will remain until the 11th of May, when court sits.

It happened that county clerk Dick Lewis was working overtime in his office, and to this fact is due the detection of the work of these desperate men. At about eleven o'clock, as Mr. Lewis was preparing to go home, he heard a noise from the direction of the jail that aroused his suspicions. Stepping through the vault corridor and into the narrow space that separates the vault wall from the door that leads into the outside jail hall, the noise increased.

His hand was on the door knob, when the door was opened from the other side, and into the room stepped Duell, with the remark that he guessed he "would take a walk." Duel wore a pair of overalls that had the chest attachment, and both hands were behind this upper annex. Dick did not know what the man had there, and stepped out of reach. But finally Richard pulled himself together and took the man by the arm, forcing him out into the hall. Cooley was yet inside the jail corridor, but about to follow Duel.

Lewis made out to call out jailor Driggett from his quarters of the hall, and Duell was returned to the jail, and both men locked in separate cells. Investigation showed that with a case knife they had sawed off one of the inch bars of the inner corridor door, likewise one from the outer door leading to the hall. They had, when at work under guard in the building a month ago, stolen and secreted a "pinch bar." With this they had, by the aid of some wire rigged as a purchase, bent the bar sufficiently to let them through. In five minutes more both men would have been out, had it not been for Lewis.

Cooley is the man who broke jail at Boyne City two years ago, and who was captured at Flint last week.

The county seat excitement still in Benzie county continues, although it has taken a slightly different turn. Sunday and Monday of last week there was great activity because of the election. Plans were matured for getting every voter to the polls. Tuesday there was excitement because the battle had been won. Practically the entire day was devoted to celebrating, the people of Thompsonville lending their presence to help make the occasion memorable. Now the excitement is because of the added importance of this place, and because of the large number of strangers coming to town. People who before this week hardly knew that there was such a place as Honor on the map of Michigan are arriving daily to pay their respects. Architects, newspaper men, traveling men, county officials are coming. Among the distinguished visitors of Tuesday were eight of the recently elected supervisors of Benzie county. They came to unofficially look over the village and see the sites that have been offered for the county buildings. The most of the eight men were favorably impressed by the village. A meeting of the board of supervisors has been called for the 20th of this month, at which meeting the plans for moving the county records from Frankfort to this village will be taken up.

GREAT LAKES FISHERIES.

The Wisconsin Commissioner of Fisheries Writes Intelligently About Commercial Fishing.

BY JAMES NEVIN.

From the Fishing Gazette.

The fishermen on Lake Superior have had very poor catches during the past two years The season of 1906 was one of the poorest the fishermen ever had. Tugs discontinued fishing early in the season from one end of the lake to the other on account of the scarcity of fish. The apparent dearth of fish is probably only temporary. There was a similar scarcity of fish in Lake Superior thirty years ago. I shall be greatly disappointed if there is not a larger catch of fish from those waters in a year or two than the fishermen ever had. The fishing season of 1904 was the best fishermen ever experienced in the vicinity of Bayfield. Following that year of plenty, the number of fishermen and nets increased three-fold in that locality, hence the fishermen feel more keenly the scarcity of the past two seasons.

The fishing has been good on Lake Michigan, especially during the past year, and the fishermen have had the best season in years. The catch has not been larger than usual but the price received by the fishermen for their product was unusually high, which combined with a good catch, made this year the best year the fishermen on these waters had.

There is a crying need of better protection for the lake trout and whitefish in the Great Lakes. The great desideratum in this matter is a law regulating the size of the meshes in the nets used by the fishermen.

Not many small meshed nets are used in Lake Superior. In general, the fishermen on these waters are desirous of protecting the small whitefish, but there are some violators in all localities. A few unscrupulous fishermen believe they should be permitted to slaughter the small whitefish when they come near the shore during the summer months and they have succeeded in doing so to a considerable extent. The game-warden has not given the small whitefish in those waters much protection in the past, consequently a great many have been taken and sold for herring or family whitefish. To prevent this the game warden should be provided with a gasoline launch for the purpose of looking after the fishing grounds of Chequamegon Bay and about the Apostle Islands, so he can run out easily, watch the fishermen as they take in their nets and be informed as to just what is being done and the kinds and size of fish taken. I have been told by Mr. Lund, the game warden in that locality, that he has seen the equivalent of one hundred packages of small whitefish captured at haul of a seine when the fishermen were catching suckers near shore.

For ten years no laws regulating the size of the meshes in nets used by the fishermen in Lake Michigan have been enacted. During this period, the fishermen have increased their investments in nets, boats, and other appliances, taken advantage of vast improvements in apparatus and transportation; reduced the size of the meshes in the nets; and pursued the fish so persistently and with so little regard to the future, that, notwithstanding the efforts of the fish commissions of the state and nation, the catch of the better classes of commercial fishes is not increasing in pounds as it should. It is true the fishermen are as prosperous as in the past, but this is due to an increased catch of herring and an increase in the price per pound received for all kinds of fish. This condition of the fisheries of the Great Lakes, especially on Lake Michigan, is due to the fact that fishermen catch, with small meshed nets, and market hundreds of tons of small, immature white fish and lake trout weighing from ½ to 1½ pounds each, thus absorbing in a large measure the work of the fish hatche-

TALE of AN UMBRELLA

My husband was a collector for the Safety Insurance company, and he had gone down to B—— to collect the sums preferred to the agents in that town.

He had already been away a week and had telegraphed me that morning to the effect that he intended returning that same afternoon, but it was 10 o'clock p. m. before I heard the welcome click of his latchkey. As we crossed the hall he stopped and took down his overcoat from the peg, at the same time taking his umbrella in his other hand and saying:

"Hush, my dear, you may as well put this in the drawing room. It is smashed entirely now!" And he laughingly opened the old "gamp," which was indeed a complete wreck. I took it from him when he had closed it, and while he went to kiss our little one I hung the umbrella into a distant corner of a dark closet under the attic stairs.

Next morning Edward blessed us as usual and set off, looking bright, strong and happy. About 11 o'clock I was busy making a pudding for an early dinner when an unusually peremptory knock at the hall door startled me.

I hastened to open it and was surprised to confront two strangers, rough-looking men and troubled-looking Mr. Snell, the director of the company by which my husband was employed.

They walked in, and Mr. Snell at once addressed me:

"Mrs. Falkner, forgive this intrusion, but your husband has lost his pocket-book or at least he says so—certainly his gift to the value of $3,000."

"Lost!" cry Edward, how could it happen?" I cried.

"I don't know!" he said nervously. "I had it in my overcoat pocket last night after I came home, and, as you know, I took my coat into our bedroom, and it was there (the coat) this morning, for nobody went into our room except myself."

"Are you sure you brought it home?" I asked.

"Sure! Yes, of course I'm sure!" he said impatiently.

"Then in that case we must search the house," said one of the strangers.

"Oh, do, do," I said eagerly. "It must be somewhere about.

"In the attic!" I cried as I ran to my husband's side. "The old 'gamp' that night, now this a years ago, and flung his coat over it, and the pocket-book must have slipped down into the umbrella. In less time than an hour I had handed it to Mr. Snell and wired my husband the joyful news.

Instead of our dear old husband came home that night, but a letter from the Safety Insurance company, in which he still holds the post of agent, to the effect that we should be the happiest people in the world.

We kept the "gamp" as a curiosity and since then I always kept the instrument my husband presented which nearly gave my husband a fit.—London News.

GROUND HOG DAY.

Survival of a Festival of the Middle Ages in Europe.

This origin of ground hog day is accounted for in the following way: Feb. 2, or Candlemas day, was a favorite holiday, marked by public display and ceremonies in Europe during the middle ages. It is still observed there by the closing of banks and offices, but not otherwise, outside of the church of church services. In the church calendar it is known as the Feast of Purification of the Virgin and was first established by Pope Sergius about the year 691 A. D. The popular name of the day is derived from the early custom of lighting up the churches with candles and carrying these in processions on this festival.

As to the weather superstition giving to candlemas the name of ground hog day, that is a worldwide fable. In Germany it is the badger that breaks his winter nap on this day to essay the thankless task of weather prophecy; in France and Switzerland it is the marmot and in England and Germany observation shows, says the Hornchesnut, that none of these small animals do thus observe the date named, also that the weather on this date does not, however forecast that of the following two months, as is supposed. But it is a general truth that to temperate climates warm and sunny weather in the first half of February is apt to be followed by a change and a cool spring, and on this fact our ground hog and badger stories are founded.

TWICKENHAM.

Famous as the Abode of Many English Literary Giants.

The place to which the lover of English literature will resort or other time his steps is Twickenham. No other small town can boast of having had the residence and beloved abode of so many famous literary lights. Not to mention the thousand names of Pope, Horace Walpole, Swift, Gay, Lady Wortley Montague, Addison, Swift, Jobnson, Tennyson and Tickleson. Surely this is a place that is temperate photo doubly immortal! Twickenham was well nicknamed by Horace Walpole the Thebes, or Troy, of England, for it has truly been to London what Thebes was to ancient Boeotia—indeed, it is a far higher degree. The big red brick house in Montpelier row, where Alfred Tennyson lived for so many years of his earlier married life was the one in which—many of his earlier poems were written. There his son Lionel, the soldier and Lord Tennyson, was born, and there the author of "Idylls" entertained many of his literary friends and admirers. Not homes should surely be sacred to all lovers of English literature, which now the duke of "Il Moulem" which witnessed those delightful gatherings graced by Tennyson, Hallam and kindred spirits within its walls. It is today called Tennyson House.—Westminster Gazette.

Man's Maids.

"Men's maids, yes," said an employment agent. "There are instances where men have their own valets. Visit the fashionable hotels of California, Florida, Palm Beach, Egypt, and as you pass down bedroom doors of a morning or an afternoon what do you see? Men dressing the studs in evening shirts, pressing trousers with patent stretchers, knotting ties and putting fresh laces in boots. The average well to do couple—he couple that runs afford the best winter and summer resorts—travel with a maid, but not with a maid and a valet, for, after all, a valet is very expensive, and his duties occupy only a few hours a day, and a maid can get through all of them just as well as not. So the average lady maid is a much more well-maid to the wife, valet to the husband. She does her better duties. They are, you know, married, and, of course, they go forth the most generous tips."—New York Press.

Reynard the Fox.

Reynard, or, as it is more usually written, Renard, is the name given to the fox in a famous German epic of the fourteenth century called "Reynard the Fox." The book is really a satire on the state of Germany in the middle ages, the different animals, each of which are given a special name, typifying different institutions. Reynard is a general term for the church, Isengrim the Wolf for the barons and Noble the Lion for the emperor. Minor characters are Tibert the Cat and Bruun the Bear. Both in the last named case and that of Reynard the personal name given by the author has passed into common speech.

Turn About.

In a Great Western railway carriage on the way up to London a youth had distributed amongst the other passengers by tonic and foolish tricks remarks indicating a great part of the journey. As they passed Hanwell Lunatic asylum he remarked, "I wonder how nice the asylum looks from the railway."

"Some days," growled an old gentleman, "you will probably have occasion to remark how nice the railway looks from the asylum."—London Answers.

"I should say she did. When she can find nothing else to do she ruffles her husband's temper."—Detroit Free Press.

Obscure Art.

"I'm afraid that you don't appreciate that composition," remarked the musician.

"No," answered Mr. Cumrox; "in all frankness, I must say I don't. It keeps me guessing."

"Have you tuneless?"

"Yes, I always have three grouses and a grouch."

Explained.

"Every coin has an obverse and a reverse side."

"Yes," replied the practical man, "the obverse side is the one I invariably call when I toss up the coin, and the reverse side is the one I call when it makes you lose."—Minneapolis Journal.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Little Sally Waters.

Two cushions are placed on the floor and the children form in a ring around them, holding each other's hands. One child sits in the middle, pretending to be sleeping. Sally. The children dance around her, singing:

"Little Sally Waters sitting by the side, Crying, crying for mother lover's come. Rise up, Sally, and wipe your eyes. Turn to the east and turn to the west, And turn to the one that you love best."

Sally rises, wipes her eyes and wipes her eyes, and turns to the one she loves the most, and kisses him. Then he takes her by the hand and leads her to the cushion prepared for her. Both sent themselves, and the children dance around them, singing:

"Oh, Sister Phoebe, how happy were we Before we married we married we married. Put on your ring so keep your head warm, And now or three kisses will do us no harm."

The two in the middle exchange kisses, the first child rises, takes her place in the ring, and the game is repeated until all have been chosen.

The Clothespin Game.

A merry and unique game which may be played by both men and women evening is called the "clothespin game." The company divide into two sides, and each side chooses a leader or captain. As many chairs as there are guests are then placed in two rows, facing each other. The bottoms then given to each leader, who sits at the head of all line, a loose bundle of clothespins, about twenty in number. At a given signal each leader passes the bundle to the next, this person passes it to the next and then without a pause took to the leader. The side which accomplishes this first is the winner, and scores one for the victory. The game is exciting, for if one person drops a clothespin he may not hand the bundle on and then pick it up and hand them all at once. This game is a good one for those who call upon the "three more times" the free speed.

Johnny Greene's Proverbs.

Toothache is worst just before breakfast. It disappears about 9:30 a. m.

Never study at night. It is bad for the eyes. But reading all about the last murder doesn't hurt them a bit.

Whistling is recreation, but picking up the chips makes the back ache.

It is tiresome for a boy's health to carry a scuttle of coal, but a football isn't heavy.

A tired boy should not run errands after school, but football and skating are restful exercises.

Practical exercises on the violin are good for the health, as they are good for the persons but other people object to them, and sometimes are as rent cures.

Breaking one's boots is dirty work, but playing marbles is fun and makes the skin of your hand tough.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Red and Yellow Sunsets.

The boys and girls have often heard perhaps that a red sunset is indicative of fine weather the next day and that a yellow sunset is indicative of rain, but do they know the reason? When the vapor of the air is on the point of condensation, but it is not actually condensed, the beams of light meet with still finer particles than they have met with before, and the red rays are bent down to the eye, because they require the least refraction. On the contrary, when the vapor of the air is actually condensed into clouds there is more resistance to the issue of light, and therefore the yellow rays are bent down to the eye, because they are more refracted than are the red rays.—Chicago News.

Humorous Raven.

An account is given of the apparently intentional humor expressed by an intelligent raven. This bird belonged to a river keeper and invariably accompanied the master when he assisted his employers in catching a basket of trout. He soon learned that the object of the men was to get the fish out of the stream, first, because he saw it was secondly, because a small trout was often given to him. That learned, the ingenious bird went fishing on his own account and succeeded in raising a drowned kitten. In great glee he carried his prize to the basket and poked it in the hole at the top where the fishes were always put in.

Feeding the Horse.

Horses vary greatly in the amount of food they do or do not require, but not much in the kind of foods they like. All horses like good hay, oats, corn and an occasional bran mash, and linseed is generally acceptable as a change. The author of "Horses" has tried and the other day he was trying potatoes, but how much to feed will soon be signified to the observing horse by every mouth.

THIS PENAL COLONY A MODEL

Brazil Seems to Have Solved One of Civilization's Problems.

The penal colony of the state of Pernambuco, Brazil, is on an island 200 miles off the coast. There are on it about 1,500 convicts, who work at 4 a. m. and work till 2 p. m. for the state cultivating cotton for a superior quality. After two o'clock they work for themselves. The island is one of the most orderly and prosperous lots of self in Brazil. It is a model convict colony and the cheapest one in all the world.

The group of islands to which the prison belongs is where the equatorial and south equatorial currents divide, and it is surrounded by a magnificent coral reef with two gaps of about 100 yards each in the shape of the letter "U" commercially. As convict labor may be had at ten cents a day there is opportunity for some fishing adventure. The island is recognized as a first-class location for a coaling station. The islands have valuable phosphatic deposits.

ON TWENTIETH CENTURY FARM.

Bathroom for Pigs Looked Upon as a Necessity.

"And this is the pigs' bathroom," said the twentieth century farmer, as he fitted an Egyptian cigarette into a long and elegant tube of meerschaum and amber.

"I have heard of hog wash, but I didn't know pigs bathed. Do they?"

The farmer struck a match on his Londonmade walking breeches.

"Yes, the modern pig bathes," he said. "With equals of rain and dirt he has been confined for a week into a hot bath, and is thoroughly scrubbed with stiff brushes dipped in a strong soft soap. This cleanliness keeps him healthy, and it increases his weight 20 per cent.

"All our agricultural colleges now advise the pig to bathe. By experiments they continually show that baths cause him to fatten a little faster. The pig's bathroom is a feature of the twentieth century farm."

BRITISH HEIR TO VISIT QUEBEC.

Prince of Wales Will Dedicate Monument to Montcalm and Wolfe.

Arrangements have been completed for the visit which the Prince of Wales is to pay to Quebec in July to attend the tercentenary celebrations, and dedicate the monument and tomb of the heroes, Wolfe and Montcalm and the men who fought under them for the possession of Canada, in memory of the battle of Quebec. This will be the prince's second visit to Canada. The last one was in 1901 and was further then Quebec. The Atlantic will be crossed in the royal yacht, possibly the Mauretania, accompanied by an English cruiser as an escort, the journey lasting Portsmouth on July 26 and reaching Quebec on July 31. The will be six days sooner than the previous voyage.

BUILD BIGGER NAVY PLEA OF ROOSEVELT

Sends Special Message Urging Construction of Four Huge Battle Ships.

HOUSE APPROVES OF PROJECT.

President Thinks Dreadnaughts Are Necessary to Keep Rank as a Naval Power.

President Roosevelt sent a special message to Congress urging both the House and the Senate to appropriate a sum sufficiently large to enable the construction of four battleships of the heaviest and most improved type. He takes the view that if Congress so authorizes four of these Dreadnaughts this year that the building of only one ship a year of this class for some time to come will enable the country to hold its own as the second power in the world.

While the message received careful attention in the House and was applauded liberally its reception in the Senate was the most favorable ever given to a document received from the President of the United States in the upper branch. It was not even read, so great was the confusion. The result was that only of the Senate heard the reading of the message from each page and finished it by less than three minutes. "The message speaks for itself."

Let me again urge upon the Congress the need of providing for the building of the best and most advanced type of ship among others. Prior to the adjournment of the last session of the present Congress it had been my hope that an appropriation could be made for the four different nations to limit the increase of their armaments, and especially to limit the size of warships. Under these circumstances I felt that the construction of our battleship a year would be a safer way to go to then positive and relative to other nations.

But actual experience showed my mistake. It has been impossible to obtain such an agreement for the limitation of armaments among the leading nations, but that there was no likelihood whatever of detriment to the interests of this country in the building of the battleships among the great military nations. At Hague in accordance with which no one nation shall have more than four or five dreadnaughts, and a nine and eminent which decides, or more probably revokes, their decisions.

Every other great naval nation has or is building a number of ships of this kind; we have provided for only two, and therefore the balance of power is not in danger of being upset. Under these conditions, to provide for only one or two battleships a year is to provide that this nation, instead of advancing shall go backwards in naval rank and relative power among the great nations.

Such a course would be unwise for us if we formed merely on our mission, and it is doubly unwise when we do not do so.

Another reason of the nation, and as commander-in-chief of the navy, there is imposed on me the solemn responsibility of advising the Congress of the measures which I consider to be necessary for the welfare of the republic in the event of international complications which may even remotely possible. Having in view this solemn responsibility I cannot advise that the Congress not provide fifty battleships of the most modern type.

I cannot too emphatically say that this is a matter of international, not of war. I can conceive of no circumstances under which this legislation would prove an aggressive war; most certainly, under no circumstances would it enter into an aggressive war against the territory or in any other manner seek material aggrandizement. I believe that the United States build a navy commensurate with its powers and its needs, because I feel that such a navy will be the surest guarantee and safeguard of peace.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Beginning with May 1, for the first time in the history of this paper and a daily newspaper of its own in New York City, Hearst and publishes its own paper ourselves.

The National Democratic Club of New York is arranging for its Jefferson Day dinner was decided over the question of inviting Mr. Bryan to attend the dinner, a majority prevailed for the invitation.

John Mitchell, the retired head of the miners' union, has declined the President's offer of a place on the commission to investigate Panama conditions. His reason being that he has decided to start a weekly newspaper at Indianapolis.

Democratic leaders in the Ninth Congressional District of Minnesota are trying to join the rear Brown organization so pleased, in fact, Johnson, and practically that delegates to the national convention be instructed for Johnson, with Bryan as second choice.

Mayor Gaynor, Judge Hylan, of former Gov. Hughes of Iowa, a Democrat, has appointed a committee to raise a fund from the Eleventh Iowa District on the Republican ticket. He was formerly a Democrat, but joined the Republican party during the campaign of 1894.

Many of the northern Minnesota mills have resumed operations. A few mills will operate only day force.

Helen Margaret Heatlyte Barker, daughter of Mrs. Barker, the last Judge Butterfield, in his instructions, said that the Sunday law had been under fire for years and that it was the duty of the jury to be tried in Kingsville City court for violating the Sunday law. It was discharged and was for acquitting.

Will Hold National Spelling Match.

DENVER'S GREAT $25,000 GATE

WELCOME ARCH AT UNION STATION, DENVER.

When the delegates to the Democratic national convention alight from the train at the Union station in Denver they will be greeted by a handsome arch, erected at a cost of $25,000. Thousands of tourists and delegates to national conventions have passed through this arch and have marvelled at its beauty and enchanted upon are very approved hospitality of the people.

The arch was begun early in 1908. It weighs seventy tons, is eighty feet in length, and fifty-two feet from the street to the highest point. The center driveway is thirty-four feet wide and the side wings are eleven feet wide and twenty-six feet high. It is built of a combination of metals that insures strength and durability. There are two electric searchlights on top, illuminating the arch.

Gavel and Sounding Block Ready for Denver Convention.

The gavel shown in the accompanying picture will be used by Chairman Tom Taggart of the Democratic National Committee, to call the national convention to order in Denver on July 7, inasmuch as it is expected that a Nebraskan will act that occasion he has ordered the gavel made in Denver. It is further believed that an Nebraskan will also be nominating speech, since the ordinary associates, some things to this pieces of lumber used. This gavel and sounding block were made by Mayor Dahlsman of Omaha to T. C. Harris of Fort Robinson, Neb. Mr. Harris is a strong supporter of Bryan, and an acquaintance of Mr. Dahlsman. BIG ALGERIAN BATTLE.

French Troops Repulse an Attack by Berbers and Arabs.

Advices from Colomb Bechar, Algeria, say that a French column passed through Tiouliouin, 150 miles from the place of Tindit, was attacked fiercely at daylight Thursday by a number of Berbers, who, with mounted Arabs were concentrating for several weeks on the Algerian frontier of Morocco.

Although surprised, the French formed rallied and fought desperately, and inflicted a heavy loss on the enemy, compelled them to retreat, leaving the dead on the field. The French losses are not known, but it is believed that the Arabs, in their bombing, Blyth, abandoned their dead and wounded. Several green flags of the prophet were captured from the Arabs by the French.

The French victory was costly, however. Twenty-eight men, including an officer, were killed and twenty-six badly wounded. The losses were greatest in the foreign legion. The Berber losses were much greater, 125 bodies being found by the French troops. The pursuit was stopped by darkness.

Block that Houses 5000 Souls.

Harold M. Finley, in a report for the Independent, the organ of the Federation of Churches, gives the result of his study of the congested area of New York City. He says: "Of the 5,000 souls and more than seventy-five blocks having a density of population of over 1,000 people to the acre, 500 blocks had population of 1,000 each; 1,000 blocks had population 40 over 3,000; 3 over 4,000; 1 with over 5,000, and one other with nearly 6,172. The line is the region that is the Avenue West Side bounded by Amsterdam and West End avenues and Sixty-first and Sixty-second streets, or 122 of the most congested blocks, the alien percentage is now 57.

Two to an Aeroplane.

For the first time in Europe two persons have made a successful flight in the same aeroplane. This occurred in France, when Henry Farman ascended in the machine of Leon Delagrange the latter steering. Prior to this Farman had made the record flight of two and a half hours, and Delagrange had made a number of flights, with his pupil.

Many of the Democratic Congressmen are trying to get the Democratic National Convention to recommend the adoption of the Initiative and Referendum in Congressional nominations.

Mr. Bryan will be in Nebraska on the day of the Democratic National Convention, to call the national convention to order in Denver on July 7, inasmuch as it is expected that a Nebraskan will act that occasion he has ordered the gavel made in Denver. It is further believed that an Nebraskan will also be nominating speech, since the ordinary associates, some things to this pieces of lumber used.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The Senate devoted its entire time Wednesday to considering bills on the calendar. Among the measures passed were those empowering letting of land in the Yellowstone Park for the benefit of Oklahoma, providing for the purchase of land between Minnehaha avenue and the Mall in Washington as city park, and providing for a reservation range in Montana, and enlarging homestead entries in certain cases. The swamp land reclamation bill was considered for a time, and after the usual fashion business of the Senate. The House devoted the entire day to the informal business of the usual unprecedented bill and chief interest was found in the consideration of two bills, as recommended by the committee on ways and means. The first was the tariff. The vote was 193 to 85 to sustain the action of the committee.

The Senate was not in session Thursday. The long calling of roll was dispensed with. Bills were introduced to have submarine torpedo boats of the Holland type, as recommended by the committee on naval affairs, not settled in the Senate. Senator Lodge introduced the Secretary of the Navy to purchase only boats of the Holland type was stricken out. The effect of the action was to give the Secretary a free hand in the selection of dreadnaughts. Under the amendment by Mr. Williams, in which he had seconded by Senator Clay, Mr. Tillman, Alabama more warships and Indiana, commandant of the Senate. The House came time. After agreeing to take up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill next, the House adjourned.

Injunction against the enforcement of Illinois state law requiring the taking of three federal judges who are to pass upon the if a bill that passed the House of Representatives, Feb. 1, 1909, was opposed by Mr. Herbert on the ground that it would practically deprive federal courts in the West would operate in the Southern states, Mr. Bryan's junctions. Senator Knox incurred the ire of the Democrats and Senator Lodge and the Berlin court toward David Jayne Hill, the retiring ambassador, in the House during the consideration of the diplomatic and consular bill. Under the Hill regime, Mr. Hill and Mr. Slayden of Texas, the latter being chairman of the on a great search to be the source of diplomatic representatives.

Senator Bacon of Georgia, Mr. Griggs of Georgia spoke in advocacy of the differentiation of the southern tariff. Mr. Burton of Ohio discussed the causes of the high cost of living and various and one other matters were discussed. With the Senate in session Friday, the House adjourned from noon until 11:30 a. m. Saturday.

Tribunes of respect to the memory of the Senator Stephen Morgan and Petion of Alabama, both of whom died during the recess of Congress had occurred "exactly the entire session of the Senate Saturday. The Bill of Colombia was appropriation bill was reported during the day. Sharp criticism of Lodge operation was made by Senator Bacon, who said the Senate had been "kept in the dark." Senator Lodge replied that he had been heard in the House in the course of consideration of the Colombian appropriation bill, which was passed on the occasion of the rules. It carries an aggregate of $3,502,262. After having been in continuous session since April 6, the House of Representatives adjourned Friday from day to day, the House at 6:15 p. m. adjourned.

The Brownsville affair was again a subject of interest in the Senate Monday, when Senator Foraker of Ohio, who was the author of the resolution of the Twenty-ninth Infantry, which was discharged without honor, made a speech in which he said the Texas scene Aug. 13, 1906. The Senator gave further attention to the bill detailing almost $3,000,000 received from the sale of public lands in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon, Oklahoma, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming, Alaska, Arizona, New Mexico, Indian Territory, Porto Rico, Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, Philippines, Hawaii

Great Lakes Fisheries.

ceiving and stocking the waters. The fishermen obtain for these small fish about two cents per pound whereas they would receive from five to eight cents per pound for the fish if they were left in the waters until they had come to maturity, adding thereby, not only the increase in the weight of the fish but a much increased price per pound as well. The fishermen could not employ more effectual means of destroying their own business than catching and marketing the young fish which come to their nets. Pharaoh's plan to destroy an obnoxious people was incomparably better planned but far less effective the moment the spigot waste at the long methods of the fishermen in eliminating their greatest asset in business. On the other hand they could not make a better investment of the money received for the immature fish than to let the fish remain in the water and come to maturity. To illustrate this—The fishermen receive about $4,000 for one hundred tons of these immature fish. If left in the water another year they would receive $16,000 for the same number of fish. If left in the lake for three years with the increase in weight and in price they would yield the fishermen $56,000, a gain of 800 per cent, over the amount they would receive for the same fish if marketed the first year; and this gain costs the fishermen nothing. What would a business man do under the circumstances? What farmer would market his stock of sucking pigs or calves when he could bring them to maturity without expense and realize an increased price per pound? In no other business or vocation are such sacrifices made or permitted. It is almost beyond belief that in this day of enlightenment and progress that the fishermen should wantonly catch and market the immature fish when it must be apparent to the dullest of them that they are injuring their own business by doing so. Some fishermen have thousands of dollars invested in the business and their children will follow the same vocation, perhaps for life. There is of course a cause for this paradoxical state of affairs and a remedy for the bad condition existing. The cause lies in the lack of good laws, the remedy is good laws well enforced.

Many fishermen plainly see that they are following a ruinous course. The Commercial Fishermen's Association, at their meeting in Milwaukee in December, decided to recommend to the legislature the adoption of a law providing that nets with meshes of less than three inches stretched shall not be used. They should have recommended a four-inch mesh at least. The fishermen as a class will not and can not, in the nature of things, successfully overcome through organization the evil. I have pointed out without the aid of good laws. Many fishermen would gladly protect and foster the immature fish, but a large number of them seem to prefer the present destructive policy.

The state sows the seed for the fishermen without charge and collects from them no taxes on the waters he crops. The fish in the waters are declared by law to be the property of the state, to be taken under such restrictions as may be prescribed. The people, therefore, have an interest, in the food supply, furnished by the waters of the state, which should be protected by laws regulating the time, methods and apparatus used in securing this food product. The legislature should pass laws regulating the size of the meshes in the nets used by the fishermen and impose such other restrictions as are necessary to protect the fish and secure the largest possible product of its fisheries. Such legislation must be supplemented by a strict enforcement of the law. Drastic measures are not necessarily or necessary for this purpose. The fishermen who now have money invested in small-meshed nets should be given time and opportunity to use up the twine on hand. A year would be sufficient for this purpose. Even beginning in 1906 no nets with meshes less than four inches should be permitted. All fish taken in nets of four-inch mesh would be marketable and the fishermen would have no fish of illegal size to market. If this plan is pursued, the fishermen will not catch as many fish with nets of large mesh during the first three years, but would receive almost as much money for the catch as at present; and in a few years they would reap a rich harvest as the result of this restraint, and the people of the state would be able to get good sized fish for their tables. By no other means will result commensurate with expenditures for the propagation of fish in those waters ever be had.

More men are employed and more capital invested in the fisheries of the Great Lakes than ever before. Gasoline launches and steam tugs have taken the place of the sail boat, and other far reaching improvements in nets, storage, etc, are employed. Considering these facts, it is only reasonable to suppose that lake trout and whitefish would be a thing of the past in the Great Lakes if it had not been for the fish hatcheries. More lake trout are caught in the waters of Lake Michigan today than were taken from those waters twenty-five years ago. Seventy-five per cent of the lake trout taken from Lake Superior fifteen years ago were of the species known as the siscowet trout. I do not think there are five hundred pounds of siscowet trout taken, now, during a whole season's fishing from Lake Superior. The siscowet trout were never propagated by the Fish Commission, which, I have, no doubt, accounts for their disappearance.

The work of the Fish Commission in planting lake trout and whitefish fry in the Great Lakes is heartily indorsed by a large majority of the fishermen depending on those waters, and it is generally acknowledged that it is due to our efforts that these fish are increasing.

Death Was Its His Relief.

Jesse P. Morris, of Saltpeter, Va., had a close call in the spring of 1906. He says: "An attack of pneumonia left me so weak and with such a cough that my friends declared consumption had lost and death was on my track. Then I was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery. It helped me immediately, and after taking two and a half bottles I was as well man again. I found out that New Discovery is the best remedy for coughs and lung disease in all the world." Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Letter to Mr. Carl Wardrop,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: Here's a lonly one.

Mr. Dooley (est of Chicago) painter, Lancaster, N. H. got the job of painting the Episcopal parsonage. He was used to a paint, as pure as Devoe, but weak and short measure—he didn't know it was weak or short measure. Somehow he managed the job, and said it would take 20 gallons.

Mr. L. F. Moore, our agent, offered to give 10 gallons Devoe. Accepted of course.

Eleven gallons did it: the 10 plus one.

Mr. Moore isn't painting parsonages on shares this year!

—One point of the laws which is frequently violated but not being generally understood by the public, and it may be of interest to fishermen and others to have it quoted. Sec. 65, No. 6849. "Section 1. That it shall not be lawful for any person to attempt to sell any fish in any of the inland lakes in this state with any kind of spear or grap hook or by the use of jacks or artificial lights of any kind, by the use of set lines or night lines or any kind of nets or any kind of firearms or explosives or other device except the hook and line."

—The rate of pension to all widows minors and helpless children now on the pension rolls at a less rate will be increased to $12 per month under the act of April 19, 1908, from the date of the act. No application is required to obtain the increased rate, but the same will be paid by the U. S. pension agent at the next quarterly payment upon receipt of the voucher properly executed which is now in possession of the pensioner. The present pension certificate should be retained until its return shall have been requested by the pension agent from whom the pension is received.

—Jas. McCann, of St. James, is here in attendance on the conference of fishermen with game Warden Pierce, which is noted in another item in this issue. Probably there is no law governing any one question that has in it so many ridiculous inconsistencies as the law governing commercial fishing. The fishermen are "damned if he does, and damned if he don't." He is always between the devil and the deep sea, and he never knows where to get off at. It is to have a better understanding of these matters that this meeting is being held.

—Dr. A. M. Wilkinson and wife, of St. James, came over Monday returning yesterday.

Mrs. Blodgett, who has been spending a week or more with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Wilkinson, at St. James, returned home Friday.

—Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, of St. James, has sold out his practice and property on the island to Dr. Graham, and will leave the island in a week or two.

—The Charlevoix city democratic committee have called a caucus for May 9th, at Dr. Crosier's office, to elect delegates to the county convention.

—Lisle Shanahan will leave Monday for Edwardsburg, where his wife is quite ill. He will attend the republican State convention while away.

—F. G. Hines and Mrs. B. W. Miller left Tuesday morning for Grand Rapids to meet Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, who are on their way home from Florida. They arrived home yesterday.

—Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew returned from the South Tuesday night, both well. Part of the winter was spent with their daughter Blanche, and the remainder at points in Florida. Both are well.

—Major Geo. Ishaps of Detroit, will conduct a great salvation meeting at the Salvation Army Friday, May 8. The Major is a man of rare ability is the staff secretary of the young people's work of the Salvation army for Michigan and Indiana province. He is also a fine speaker and musician. Don't fail to hear him. All are welcome.

—As a number of Charlevoix people are likely to be visitors at East Jordan on next Wednesday, the 13th inst., it might be interesting for them, as well as others, to know that on that evening at Loveday Opera House will be presented something especially good in the theatrical line, Bud Hicks, The Yankee Doodle Boy," a musical comedy drama, which has been very successfully produced in all the larger cities during the past winter and so recently as the first half of this week has been filling an engagement at the Majestic Theatre of Grand Rapids, the week before having been spent in one of the best theatres in Toledo. As this is no wise conflicts with attractions at the local play house and we have no advertising consideration, it is likely that a theatre party may be gotten up to come back with those who are in attendance at the Eastern Star convention.

"Higbee of Harvard."

The Seniors of the Charlevoix High School will present the above college play at the Charlevoix Theatre on Friday evening of this week. The class has worked hard to put this play on in good shape, and as the receipts are to go toward commencement expenses, we are all interested in the matter. Turn out and give the seniors a good audience. Following is the cast of characters:

Traverse City Record: The land of milk and honey, horses, cattle, etc., taken to North Manitou Island was not for Smith & Holt but for A. J. White, of Cedar Run, who has a contract with Smith & Holt to cut all their timber on the island, the cut to be by the thousand. Mr. White is building a mill that will cut from 40 to 50 thousand feet a day with one circular and one resaw. He is also erecting a boarding house, houses to rent to the men, etc. and when the mill is built and woods work in full operation there will be employment for about 150 men. The lumber operations will bring quite a little village to the island as there will be a store, post-office and school on the island. "Barge Dresden, which went ashore last year, was also loaded with Mr. White's supplies.

MILK INSPECTION.

Why Should Not the City Have a Pure Milk Law?

Mr. R. W. Paddock, of the X. L. Produce Co.'s creamery, brought to this office Tuesday, a half pint glass cream bottle, which contained between two and three ounces of material that it would be unsafe to look at just before dinner.

It consisted of a tumor like gathering of corrupt matter, which Health Officer Dr. Thielen says was a combination of broken down tissue blood corpuscles, mucous and epithelia cells, asquetionably containing bacteria of a most dangerous sort.

The question of the legal rights of the subject is the fact that the matter was taken from a ten gallon can of milk, in the clarifying process. The can came to the creamery from the country among many others.

The disclosure seems to argue that the city should have a milk inspector, and that pure milk should be made as obligatory upon all dealers as the State prescribes for other foods.

Best Sugar Matters

The sugar beet season commences this spring with the brightest outlook in the history of the industry. Planting is already well under way in the Saginaw valley, several hundred acres having been put in during the last week. This is about the record for early planting in Michigan, and is from a month to seven weeks earlier than the seeding of last spring, which was greatly delayed by rains and unfavorable weather. The Michigan Sugar company shipped in eight carloads of seed for its half dozen factories, which has practically all been distributed and this, with a large supply on hand from last season is now in the farmers' hands. All of the Michigan Sugar company's plants have contracted the largest acreage in their history; in some cases to 10 per cent larger than last year. The same is true of all other factories in the state, according to reports. Each succeeding year, with one or two exceptions, has shown a substantial growth in the sugar industry, with the best acreage expanding over an increasingly large territory until last year more than 110,000 acres were put in. The beet and sugar outputs were reduced by poor weather conditions, the wet spring and prolonged drouth in the summer and early fall damaging the crop greatly and lowering its sugar content. As a result the sugar product remained at about the same figures as the year previous, when it was 125,000,000 on much less acreage. This year it is believed the beet territory will reach 125,000 acres, and produce under the favorable conditions that now seem probable, a crop that will yield sugar worth $10,000,000, the coveted mark striven for by the manufacturers, which is nearly $5,000,000 higher than the value of any previous output. Sugar manufacturers are in high spirits this spring and predict that their industry will make the greatest stride in spot ever known in any state. They are on excellent terms with the farmers and all differences that threatened to cause trouble last year have been adjusted.

The summer meeting of the Grand Traverse District grange will be held at Peninsula grange at Old Mission, Wednesday and Thursday, June 3 and 4th.

Traverse City Record: After wading off the gloomy hand of Death for nearly five score years and ten, "Uncle Dan" Whipple has at last passed to that great beyond where a thousand years are as a day. "Uncle Dan" peacefully passed away at the home of J. M. Akers of Hatchee Crossing at 8:15 Sunday night. He had been unconscious since Sunday morning. During the previous week he had been troubled with hemorrhage of the brain, and this, combined with his extreme old age, was the immediate cause of his death. Many of the friends who helped place flowers on Uncle Dan was 100 years old.

For Governor.

The SENTINEL does not deny, and is proud of the fact, that it has, for many years been a strenuous advocate of the political and personal merits of Chase S. Osborne, of Sault Ste. Marie.

We know the man, and know him to be one of the most stalwart and able republicans in Michigan. We know him to be, in all respects the peer of any aspirant for the office of governor of Michigan.

There is trouble ahead for the next republican State convention, and that trouble will be the outgrowth of "Warnerism." Fred M. Warner has been a creditable governor, and has, so far as his personal character is concerned, cast no reproach upon the party that elevated him to the governorship. He has, however, had a hobby that runs counter to our views of the franchise, and on that hobby he has announced himself as a candidate for governor for a third term. The hobby, in our opinion does not create an emergency that warrants a departure from established usage.

The SENTINEL has twice before advocated the nomination of Chase S. Osborne for governor. Three is a lucky number. We believe if the state convention will drop Warner and all his competitors, and nominate Chase S. Osborne, it would make no mistake.

The upper peninsula has never had a governor. It is entitled to recognition, and Chase S. Osborne is the man that should be chosen, as a representative citizen of that section, worthy as a man, able, loyal in his allegiance to republicanism, and a champion of every Michigan interest.

For Governor, Chase S. Osborne.

To Our Farmer Friends.

The Charlevoix Creamery has run two seasons, the last twelve months continually. We have paid the best price ever paid for milk and cream for twelve consecutive months. We have done this at a loss, because the supply has not been sufficient to pay running expenses.

We need the milk or cream of every farmer within reach of our plant to make a success. It is to your interest to support us in every way possible. We cannot afford to gall at your product until you have worn. We ask you to arrange to each neighborhood to send to your cream. We will pay you Eighn price for your butter fat delivered to us. We will pay $1.00 per 100 lbs. milk and in July and August $1.25 per 100 pounds for clean sweet milk. You cannot afford to peddle either milk, cream, or butter and thus cripple the best market for all you can produce at all times of year. Charlevoix has not been a good market, except in a small way for dairy products. The town will not grow or develop population to consume what you produce.

The Creamery gives you an unlimited market at fair prices. Will you give it the support you should or will you continue to say "Oh, yes, I want the Creamery to run because I get a better price for my butter, but I want the other fellow to run it." Did it ever strike you that the other fellow might get tired and quit when your market will be poorer than ever because the country is producing more every year? Now is the time, not next year, to show your interest if you want this market to continue. Once it receives your united support it will benefit you in other ways, already planned but not put in effect, because they have not given the Creamery the support it deserves.—Think—Act.

Reports from Detroit say that a big celebration is to be held on Mackinac Island July 17, at British Landing. It will be made the occasion of dedicating one of the two cannon from old Fort Sumter. The cannon has been examined, facing the landing, which marks the spot where the British landed and captured the American fort there in 1812, and also where the Americans landed two years later to a rain endeavor to recapture the fort. Tablets telling of these historic events are being mounted. Vice President Fairbanks, who summers yearly on Mackinac Island, has been asked to be chief speaker and many other notables will be present. Troops from Fort Brady and lake gunboats will add to the picturesqueness.

By evening the gale was at its height, the Black Eagle was running under mainsail and fore-staunsl sliapsail. The sea had risen very quickly, as it will when the wind comes upon a swell. As far as the eye could see from the summit of a wave there was a vista of dark tossing ridges with their innumerable crests of foam. When the barque sank in the hollow between two mountains she was high as her yardarm, and the two fugitives, clinging to the weather bulwark, had a feeling of amusement at the manner of water which hung above them. One or two wave-crests broke over the vessel, crashing and roaring down the deck and washing hither and thither until gradually absorbed between the planks or drained away through the scuppers below. On each of these occasions the poor nation vessel would lurch and shiver in every plank, as if with a foreknowledge of the fate.

The carpenter came aft, balancing himself as best he could, and shouted to the mate in the intervals of the inpetuosities. "The hold is gainin' fast," he said. "The water is then than the pumps. Is the hand to be starboard bow?"

"Keep hand on deck," Biggs shouted, and then crawled along to the fidcle-screen. "There's no hope for the ship but we may save ourselves," he said. "Lower away the boat and man the pumps."

"He's not fit to command," said Ezra to the mate. "What would you advise?"

"Wait for the round and lower the boats on the lee side. They may live or no, but it's the only chance for us. They've been heavy all hand's day."

"The ship was settling down in the water so that it was not difficult matter to let the boats down. They only lowered the lee one, however, as the majority of the crew got safely into the long boat, and the two Hindoos with Miggs and four seamen, occupied the gig. The mate was chiding and cursing the pipes, showing out the green turf upon their sunken and a little dark grove of peasants, who were watching the scene from shore, but nothing in the ship was like the catastrophe. There was no alternative but to sou straight for the nearest point of land, for the boats were filling, and quite go down with every moment.

"The ship's gone," Ezra said, as they rose on the summit of a wave. "When they came to again all looked round, but there was no sign of the ill-fated Black Eagle.

As he spoke a great wave hurled the boat in upon its broad beam, and flung it down upon the coral jagged rocks, which formed the base of the cliff. There was a rushing, crushing sound, and the stout keel snapped asunder, while a second wave surged over it, tearing out the struggling occupants, and bearing them on, only to hurl them upon a second ridge of rocks. The passengers, the cliff gave piteous cries of grief and pity, and blended with the agonized shrieks and screams of drowning men and the thunder of the surging waves. Leading down there could see the black dots, which indicated the heads of the poor wretches below, alternating one by one as they were hurled upon the rocks or dragged down by the undertoward.

Ezra, was a strong swimmer, but when he had shaken himself free of the boat, and kicked away a woman who clung to him, he made no attempt to strike out. He knew that the current would carry him to the rocks, and he resolved himself for the struggle with them. A given fellow came swirling over the outlying reef. It carried him in like a feather and landed him up against the face of the cliff. As he struggled upon its corner, he mechanically put out his hands and seized a projecting portion of the rock. The shock of the contact was tremendous, but he retained his grasp and found himself safe, with the water knee-standing battered and breathless upon a ledge which could be reached by any foot gave him foothold. It was a marvelous escape, for looking on all sides he could not see any break in the sheer declivity.

He was by no means safe as yet. If a wave had landed him there, another might come as high and fling him away. Looking down, he saw one or two another come break into scattered foam below him, and a second green green billow came rolling majestically towards him. He could do no it cause fanning in, and calculated that it would come at least as high as his knees. Would it drag him back with it, or could he hold his own? He braced himself as firmly as he could, placing his feet apart, and digging his nails into the inequalities of the rock until the blood gushed from them. The water surged up upon him, and he felt it tugging like some murderous demon at his legs, but he held on firmly until the pressure decreased. Looking below he saw the wave sinking down the face of the cliff. Another wave overtook it and welled it up again, raining down the drifts of the green water. Ezra saw a long white arm shoot up, and grasp the edge of the ledge upon which he stood.

Even before the face appeared the young man knew that the hand was his father's. A second wave followed the first and then the old merchant's face was uplifted from the waves. He was really brutal and battered, and his clothes had been partly torn away. He was evidently his son, however, and looked up at his deliverer, while he strove to gather up his strength to the ledge of rock. He could was the opinion that his clinging fingers resembled Ezra's tines.

"There's no room here," the young man said, morosely. "Hold your room for one."

The merchant was hanging with the lower portion of his body in the water, for he had but a few bottoms, but the old man had time to think of many an incident in his past life. He looked up appealingly at his son. Ezra saw that the next wave would lift him clear up on to the ledge. In that case he might be hurled off.

"Leave go!" he cried.

"Help me, Ezra!"

His son brought down his heavy heel upon the bloodless hands. The old fellow under gave a wild shriek and fell back into the sea. Looking down, Ezra saw his drowning face gazing up at him through the water. Slowly it sank until it was but a flickering white patch far down in the green depths. At the same moment a thick rope came dangling down the face of the cliff, and the young man knew that he was saved.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Ozan was the sweetheart of the worthy couple at Philliners Gardens when Kate Hardcastle was brought back to them. Dead Mrs. Hemmins had coaxed her to her bosom and almost her and wedded her and wept over her, since the doctor then so confident that it was only to nourishing an exposure of pneumonia severity and by bedtime had managing almost that he was able to go back himself in decent comfort.

"And yet really thought we had forgotten you because we were busy enough to stop writing at that children's request." he said, patting Kate's pair dacks tenderly, and kissing her.

"I was very foolish," she said, blushing prettily and rearranging her hair, which had been somewhat troubled by her nervous grasses.

"Oh, that accounted—that accounted—" cured the doctor, shaking his fat and dancing about on the hearth rug. "They heaven they may catch him before the trial comes off."

The good physician's prayer was not answered in this case, for Hurt was the most unfortunate of fellows, and his poor friends all went down to the Winchester Assizes to give evidence, and the survey was duly convicted of the death of Hudson Scuffin and condemned to death. He was executed some three weeks afterwards, dying as he had lived, stolid and unrepentant.

They is a little unpretending church in the Fulham Hemmins Gardens, in which a little unpretending clergyman preaches every Sunday out of a very little shabby pulpit. It lies in Castle Inne, and is a narrow place, with the great wood of church gaits sides and flows within a hundred yards of it, so now it is hidden in existence, for it has been then in the dignity of a church, and the hall is so very commodious that the average worship man produces quite an noble appearance. The congregation is made for families who have chanced to find out a very little, and who, in the spirit with their spiritual welcome that they have retained, there is any and the sitting congregation. So scanty is it that the congregation consists of only two whop he has spent the week in poll-ing, and strengthening the current, and then ends upon the Sunday here very scanty is the audience to which it is to be addressed.

Imagine, then, the good man's surprise when looked out upon the hands of marriage of two couples simultaneously, each of which he knew to be the upper circle of life, and when informed at the same time that the ceremonies were actually to be celebrated under his own supervision and in his own church. In the fullness of his heart he at once bought two bouquets and presented them with the flowers and red berries, which he brought in triumph to his wife, who, good woman, affected extreme delight, and afterwards ran away all the showiest fly and replaced it in her own taste. The sanity congregation was in the last surprised when they heard that Tobias Clutterbuck, bachelor, was about to marry Lucinda Scully, widow, and that Thomas Hunsdale was to do as much to Catherine Hemmins, spinster. They commanded the tidings to their friends, and the result was a great shortness of attendance at the church, so that the lamentable preached his favorite sermon upon learn fig trees to a crowded audience, and received such a hearty amen at the end that he was half ashamed of it.

Mr. Hunsdale had given a handsome fee to the clerk, who had made more as a result of the wedding than he had done for a month, and he noted Miss Lindbow's brother's bonesdell, says the Washington Star. While there the legal tender of the Republics of the islands and their relation to the health of the people, and their returning to the United States she has continued the research, and has written a book on the subject of tobacco of white persons in the Philippines.

Mosquito specimens have been sent to her by many strangers and she has classified them, discovering many new varieties. Miss Lindbow has seized about fairly different specimens of the "mosquito," or disease-bearing, and of these she has classified more than four do the greater part of the work of disseminating malaria.

The mosquito, which spends yellow lives in the tropics of this hemisphere, is also found in the Philippines, but Miss Lindbow says that, as there is no yellow fever in the islands and cases of malaria are going to drift into it. You must seek it with care. If you would study fever in the east must make living the largest business you have on hand, and you will not become successful in your study.

Toil and trial lead to triumph; they are the stepping stones to success. In the man seeking like the narrow gate, and the path of the right, the narrow path. Christ says, enter this path, not because it is painful, but because its yields to the great. Only do hard of the strive to do so. The path of duty is hard, but it leads to the gate.

OTHER REMARKABLE CURES.

Mr. Jacob L. Davis, Gideon, Stone county, Mo., writes: "I have been in bad health for about three years, and after taking twelve bottles of your Peruna I am cured." Mrs. A. M. Thompson, 1 Ashland Place, Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "I am happy to inform you that I am cured of my long standing catarrh by using your Peruna. I shall always speak a good word for Peruna. I felt better immediately, and five bottles restored me to complete health."

A SINCERE RECOMMENDATION.

Mr. D. C. Thomas, Hiram, Allegan Co., Mich., writes: "Two years ago I was badly afflicted with catarrh of the stomach. I had had a run of typhoid fever, and I was left in a very bad condition. I could hardly walk across the street without fainting. Finally I came to the conclusion that I had catarrh of the stomach and I began to take Peruna. I took about six bottles of it in all, and after taking three or four bottles I was entirely cured of stomach trouble. I can recommend Peruna highly."

80 AX. NATURE'S DISINFECTANT, CLEANSER AND PURIFIER

Everybody realizes the necessity of some method or purification of sinks, drains and closets in which may lark the germs of a dangerous nature.

Health is a question of cleanliness and good ventilation.

Most people are familiar with the use of disinfectants in their sickness, some of which are unpleasant, and contained with disagreeable odors, or which are dangerous to handle, or poisonous which disinfectants some of necessity be of a more or less dangerous nature, and must be used for the purpose and for no other, and in consequence keep from children and careless handling.

There is, however, within the reach of all our readers, a disinfectant, safe and economical article that will not only answer every purpose, but which can also be used for a multitude of domestic cleansing and purifying purposes.

Borax is a pure, white harmless powder, and can be used in the sick room, in fact Borax has often been called "Nature's Cleanser and Disinfectant."

NEGLECTED BAYBERRIES.

Time Was When the Crop Was Eagerly Harvested.

Years ago when the first frosts had come Connecticut people went out to pick the berries of bayberries to make the pale green wax candles which when burning gave out the aromatic smell of the bayou that the pickers crushed in pulling off.

We no longer pick bayberries for company candles for the winter time. It spoil a few romantic souls who gallop or trotte enough to make a candle or two for old memories, a few students who want to try to make bayberry candles by some discovery or other in a magazine and some stunch old New Englanders who love to get out in the pastures on a crisp fall day—those are all who gather the bayberries now.

Left to themselves, the clumps of bushes have spread out and in some cases overrun whole pastures. In some parts of Connecticut the bushes have grown very tall.

In Branford, on the coast, there are almost bayberry trees, as many can be found growing along the highways ten feet tall and some even taller. These bayberries must be very old. You can not help wondering how many crops have been picked off them in years past.

As early as 1717 the town records show that the gathering of bayberries on the highways and common was for a limited time before Sept. 15. A fine of 10 shillings for each violation was the penalty. It appears that the wax from the berries was used by making a blacking and a salve and that bayberry wax continued an article of trade in Branford down to the last fifty years.

Human nature being about the same one century in another, there was probably in 1717 a great complaining of people who picked the berries "before they were half ripe" or "got up mornings before anybody else had a chance," hence the regulation and the fine.

But what a beautiful, buried bayberry picking it must have been the morning of Sept. 15.—Hartford Courant.

DANGEROUS FISH.

Ways of the Green Moray of Bermuda and the Devilfish.

When one speaks of dangerous fish the first that come to mind are the shark and the octopus, but neither of these is really terrible to a fisherman. The shark never attacks a boat and the octopus very rarely.

A much more venomous creature than either shark or octopus is the devilfish—a large ray that is common in the waters of the Atlantic. This fish grows to a weight of a ton and a half and, besides formidable teeth, is armed with a horrible barbed and poisonous spine in the tail. It has often been known to attack boats.

A fishing party in a launch succeeded in harpooning one of these fish in the bay known as Amazon Pass, Texas. The brute towed them eighteen miles out to sea and very nearly upset the launch. It was twenty-five feet long and weighed 3,000 pounds.

A very rare creature is the green moray of Bermuda. This rather resembles a conger eel, but is green in color and savage beyond any fish that swims. An English marine officer, falling off Bermuda a year or two ago, hooked a large specimen and began to pull it in.

His negro boatman, his eyes staring with fright, begged him wildly to cut the line. The officer at first refused, but when he saw the fish turn on itself and with a crunch of saw edged teeth bite a large piece out of its own body he came to the conclusion that it was not a nice thing to have in a small boat.

The swordfish is a dangerous creature. Swordfish are caught for the sake of their oil and flesh, especially along the Atlantic coast of the United States. They are harpooned in the same manner in which whales used to be killed. Quiet enough until attacked, the swordfish then seems to go raving mad and fights with unmatched ferocity.—London Answers.

Hinlze First Steps in English.

A service had been sought at Cabetz to sealing the wall of the premises into the compound of Ju-Ju. Clergyman dressed in a complete suit of European clothes. The man had on the previous evening concealed himself inside a shop and had employed his time still morning in fitting himself with a complete suit of clothes, including a white shirt, with studs and sleeve links, carefully put on; black socks, a pair of boots, a watch and chain, handkerchief and even a pocketknife, with a silver hat and stick. He even went the length of writing his name inside the hat. On being caught he said he wanted to learn English and as a politeness step thought it best to dress himself in rabbit's clothes.—Bombay (India) Advocate.

The Difficult Handshake.

THE THERMOMETER.

It Was Invented by a Poor Man Who Had Failed as a Merchant.

There is one little instrument in which the interest of all classes of people in this country never diminishes, though all the changing seasons of the year, from the first day of January to the last day of December. It regulates the business pulse of the nation and is the arbiter to which men of all conditions turn. And this little instrument is the thermometer, which bears the name of Fahrenheit.

Before the seventeenth century men could only judge of the musical heat prevailing at any place by their personal sensations and could only speak of the weather in a very indefinite way as hot or very hot, cool or very cold. In that century several attempts were made by scientific experimenters by means of tubes containing oil, spirits of wine and other substances to establish a satisfactory means of measuring heat, but none of them proved successful. Even Sir Isaac Newton, who perhaps, as many can be seen by his work, and also the noted astronomer, Halley, turned his attention to the problem of heat measure.

It was reserved to Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit, an obscure and poor man, a native of Dantzig, to give to the world the instrument which has proved to be so serviceable to mankind. He left the business in his merchants and, having a taste for mechanics and chemistry, began a series of experiments for the production of thermometers. At first he made these instruments with alcohol, but he soon became convinced that the mercurial mercury was a more suitable substance to use in the glass tube.

Fahrenheit had removed from Dantzig to Amsterdam, and there about the year 1720 he made the mercury thermometer which has ever since been fashioned much like the original.

The basis of his scale was to mark on the tube the two points respectively at which water is congealed and boiled and, to graduate the space between. He began with an arbitrary heating, beginning with 32 degrees, because he found that the mercury descended 32 degrees more before cooling, as what he thought the extreme cold resulting from a mixture of ice, water and salt ammonine. In 1724 he published a distinct treatise on the subject of his experiments and the conclusions that had resulted therefrom.

Circles of Students soon after suggested the more rational graduation of a hundred degrees between freezing and boiling point. This was the centigrade thermometer. Reaumur proposed another graduation which has been preferred by the French, but by far the largest part of the world adopted Fahrenheit's scale has been accepted and used, with 32 degrees as freezing, 55 degrees as temperate, 96 degrees as blood heat and 212 degrees as boiling point.

It is true that the acre of Fahrenheit's scale is a solecism, since it does not mark the extreme to which heat can be carried. This little blunder, however, does not seem to have been of any practical consequence.

Arctic explorers have persisted in describing temperatures below the zero of Fahrenheit, and scientists have produced artificially temperatures far below any ever dreamed of by the thermometer maker of Amsterdam. There is doubt as to the year of the death of Fahrenheit, but it is generally placed in 1740.—Los Angeles Times.

Sun Power.

There is one source to which all minds revert when the question is mentioned, a source most troubling and yet one which has so far eluded the investigator. The sun on a clear day delivers upon each square yard of the earth's surface the equivalent of approximately two horsepower of mechanical energy without continuing. If such a fraction of this power could be transformed into mechanical or electrical energy and stored it would do the world's work. Here is power delivered at our very doors without cost. How to store the energy so generously furnished and keep it on tap for future use is the problem. That in the last half century will see some solution thought, either chemical or otherwise, seems likely.—H. S. Pritchett in Atlantic.

Victoria and Lady Millais.

It is related that when Sir John Millais fell ill (poor Ophelia!) and the Princess Louise to the dying man to inquire what favor she could second Lady Millais to alleviate his sorrow if not his pain, Sir John thereupon called for his writing tablet and inscribed upon it the words, "I should like the queen to see my wife." The Princess Louise broke through her iron rule not to receive any woman whose marriage had been once dissolved, whether there be blame or not, graciously returned to the request and accorded the secret titled lady a tender and sympathetic interview.—St. James' Gazette.

The Methodical Fish.

The sunniest fish that ever could be fished in down in the depths of the deep sea.

He twisted his brows and he scratched his head and he pondered and pondered.

And after reflection he soberly said:

"I've given this matter much serious thought.

And my decree to one I shall come day be caught.

Now, if this comes to pass, I trust that I may

Be caught in an orderly, businesslike way.

No one in his senses can ever deny

A fish is intended by me to be one.

Yet nasty a fish as so careless he will Take a bait in his mouth or perhaps be in the gill.

But I'm more methodical, as I shall try

To join in your union the hook and the line.

Well, this orderly fish went his orderly ways

He kept his eyes open with wide, thoughtful gaze,

And whenever he saw a well baited hook,

He rolled up his eye with contemplative look

And then swam away, with a satisfied laugh,

Saying, "There's not the hook to fit me yet, I think!"

So he kept his eyes open, as every one ought,

And somehow the wise old fish never was caught!

ALL FAIR IN LOVE AND WAR.

Proof That the Modern Maiden Is Not Easily "Stumped."

It was his first dinner at her house, and he was anxious to show her the maid's day out. The girl sat down and considered. She didn't know a thing about cooking.

But dear, dear, Rome wasn't built in a day and one couldn't acquire the gentle art of cooking in an afternoon. So the old rule of "When in doubt use the telephone," was applied, and little girl smiled to herself and set the table in perfect order.

The cakes, raised and less for that matter, were simply marvels and the vegetables were delicious. He looked askance and sniffed at the meat, but only. Only the baskets and boxes in the kitchen told the story. Some were less cover of the best caterers in town, the others, the ones that the roast and vegetables had come in, were frugal a delicatessen shop that makes a specialty of soothing our diseases to order, of course, he liked the dinner, and the demure little maid only puckered up her lips and nod and to herself, "I wonder if I am an old fraud."

MATTER FOR THE SCIENTISTS.

Theory as to Whether We Live Inside or Outside Earth.

There are a number of believers in the theory that we are living inside the earth instead of outside. These unpleasant people want us to admit that we are actually living on a shell like a huge nut. Just what good it will do us to think this let's clever. About the only benefit to be derived from the hypothesis, so far as we can see, is present is the possibility that the scientists may prepare themselves for a hard thing against the inner side of the shell if they ever go up too high.

We are also told that the acceptance of this kernel in the nut theory will explain many things—some of which we remember.

It will also upset a great many things with which we are familiar and which, on the whole, we like pretty well.

The leads us to remark that we are for to believe we are outs. At the same time if the inside facts are convincing we are open to conviction.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

LYDIA DARRACH.

Lady, House, Philadelphia, Wife, She Played Euchre Yesterday.

One of the favorite stories connected with the Haseldine is the tale of Lydia Darrach's parlormaid, which story, like others of similar import, has been discredited by the diehrisinlly historian. Notwithstanding the cold douche thrown upon the tradition it remains popular with all who know it. The house where the famous events dropping on the part of the Quakeress took place is not on so well known.

Those who have heard or read the story of Mrs. Darrach hardly need to be informed that she and her husband lived in what was called the Lodge house, once at the southeast corner of Little Rock and Second streets. Little Rock was the thoroughfare which runs in a southwestern direction from Rock street to Second street. The ground upon which the Lodge house stood was acquired by Bethania Lodge, a well to do carpenter, who caused practically a pole house in this vicinity, from George Clymer in April, 1763, and the upper little house was erected immediately. It was a speculation, but there is nothing to show that the owner ever lived there.

The house gained its fame from its peculiar trends, which was within anyone's hand the adventure, which is believed to have since Washington and his army from capture by the British, because Darrach was the number of the first volume of the American Quarterly Review, issued in March, 1827, the title was Little Rock and Second. There it is credited to "Gardon's Ancient of the American Revolution." The author of the story in the Ancient Gun Quarterly Review, however, seems have had access to Major Garden's manuscript, for the story was not published in the Ancient Gun Quarterly series was issued in the fall date of the year 1828.—Philadelphia Ledger.

STORIES OF TENNYSON.

Showing Some of the Odd Ways of the Famous Poet.

In the memoirs of the late William Allingham, the English poet, appear some interesting reminiscences of Tennyson. Allingham's first sight of him was at Twickenham, where Tennyson was then living. He says: "Soon came in a tall, broad shouldered, swarthy man, slightly stooping, with loose dark hair and beard. He wore spectacles and was decidedly very unprejudiced. Hollow cheeks and the dark pallor of his skin gave him considerably superior. He was a strange and eiry-looking fellow. The great man peered close at me and then shook hands cordially, yet with a profound quietude of manner. He was then about forty one, but looked much older."

In 1880 Allingham visited Tennyson at the latter's home, Farringford, in the Freshwater, Isle of Wight. One night they were talking on the downs together, and Allingham said that he felt happy. Tennyson said gloomily, "I'm not at all happy—very unhappy." The reason, as Tennyson afterward explained, for his particular unhappiness was his uncertainty regarding the condition and destiny of man. Allingham was very zealous to photograph him on this visit, but Tennyson positively refused. "You make lines under my eyes," he said.

At another time during this visit, as Allingham writes, they talked of dreams. "Tennyson said, in my boyhood I had intuitions of immortality—unprovided, I have never been able to express them. I shall try some day." I said that I, too, had felt something like that kind, whereat Tennyson, being in one of his less sociable moods, growled, 'I don't believe you have. You say it out of rivalry.'"

Allingham describes Tennyson's fondness for strange satyrs, such as jumping round and round like a pigeon, and says, "He is the only person I ever saw who can do the most indecorous things without any loss of dignity."

Feet of the Ancient Greeks.

A walk through the R. Isi museum and a close examination of the pedal extremities of ancient art, there show they are all bad about the feet. "The Thrower," a celebrated piece, has particularly bad examples of injudicious bunion joints. If the foot of Apoxyomenos, used as a model in good art schools, represents the foot the average Greek corns and bunions must have been common in that classical country.—British Shoemaker.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

When to Breed Ewes.

Ewes should never be bred under one year of age, and in buying a flock let both with this in as good an age as may to get them. One may have from two, however, to get the ewes of this age, as most men like to keep these young ewes and will off their old ones. As with other classes of live stock, older ewes and dams usually give stronger and more vigorous offspring than do those bred for the first time, but the difference is not great. In fact females thoroughly matured, bold to good sires, give just as good results as their older mates. And this is as true with sheep as with other animals. Ewes from yearlings up to four years give the best results. When they get much over that it is a good plan to sell them and let the other fellow take the risk of having old toothless ewes on his hands.—Farm Progress.

Feed For Young Pigs.

The younger an animal the more nutritive matter it requires to its food, says Farm Progress. When very young pigs are growing they are probably at bone very rapidly in proportion to size and consequently require more phosphates in their food, especially of lime in a soluble condition. Milk contains all the necessary substances for pigs, but after awhile they become of such size as to be unable to consume enough milk to supply them, as they must drink almost eight times as much water in the milk as there are solids. To supply this deficiency cornmeal is added, but cornmeal is deficient in minerals matter. Bran, ground oats, shipstuff and finely ground middlings contribute in addition to the milk and cornmeal will prove advantageous.

Reseeding Meadows.

Permanent meadows and pastures offers are issued to reseeding. Many farmers complain that they find that there is no grass plant to occupy the place. If there are any tiny bare spots, they are now a mixture of clover, timothy, redtop, etc., on the land in the early spring. A short, very thin harrow run over the ground before frost and the seedling have a lot of good. A light dressing of manure—a few loads per acre put on with a spreader—does greater results than when plowed down for corn, as is the usual practice. A heavy sod is a sure foundation of grass. In farming, and we may take other occupations, it—Alva Agee in National Stockman.

Wounded Trees.

The following mixture is recommended for repairing the wounds of trees: Melt resin and warm a little crude petroleum in separate vessels; pouring into a third vessel three parts resin to one of petroleum, then add as much of the warm oil as the mass will cover. It is said not to run in warm weather nor crack in cold, and cuts covered with it will not fall to heal satisfactorily. It is much cheaper than paint. If a limb is broken it should be cut off smoothly to its parent trunk or branch and the cut covered with this preparation. It is also said to apply to wounds of the bark or trunk of trees by insects.

Why For Pigs.

Results of experiments at Danish experiment stations show that twelve pounds of whey from separator skims milk cheese are equal to one pound of grain for pig feeding, or one pound of skimmilk equals two pounds of whey in feeding value. Experiments at the Wisconsin station show a higher feeding value for whey, as it contains more fat and casein than that used above. A suitable feed may be made by mixing together equal parts of shorts, ground oats, bran and cornmeal, mixed with a moist state just thick enough to pour well. Whey is then fed in the same way as skimmilk or may be freely mixed with other feed stuffs.

Day's Ration For Sheep.

A day's ration for a sheep is estimated at two pounds of hay, half a pound of bran and half a pound of ground oats when there is no pasture, but as large sheep consume more than smaller ones the estimated ration may not be strictly correct. Sheep should also be supplied with sweetened food, mixed corn or being nights reduced. They should not be overfed, but should be kept in moderate condition. In summer good pasture is sufficient.

Silage a Valuable Feed.

At a recent extensive feeding experiment of steers carried on by the Kansas Agricultural college it was demonstrated that it cost almost seven times as much to make a pound of gain when hay was fed as when silage was fed for roughage and about three times much when corn stover was fed as when silage or silage and stover were fed. These facts are well worth thinking over and that very carefully.—Farm Progress.

Diamonds.

Why are diamonds expensive, being merely hard and sober? Because women love them. And why do women love them? Because they are expensive and sober.—London Chronicle.

GRANGE CO-OPERATION.

A Successful Grange Co-operative Store In New Jersey.

In December, 1902, the Fruit Growers' union, the Farmers' Alliance and several others who were Patrons formed the Grange Co-operative society of Vineland, N. J. It was incorporated under the laws of New Jersey. They owned a warehouse 24 by 70 feet, two stories high, contiguous to the New Jersey Central railroad, previously used for storage purposes. They also owned several building lots not far away. These lots they erected a building by 30 feet, two stories high. The upper story gives a fine, commodious hall. The lower part is used for the store, with a small capital, which was opened to the public in July, 1903.

As this is eminently a poultry raising region, they make a specialty of all kinds of poultry supplies as well as all other materials used for feeding stock and for family use. Fertilizers are also dealt in largely. Family groceries are kept, but money goods, clothing or hardware. Dry goods form a stock organization, stories being 50 feet, 25 feet. The board of nine directors, and all Patrons, twenty-nine of the stockholders must also be members of the grange. Those who are not Patrons can be admitted only upon the recommendation of responsible members of the Order.

They for they have been able to pay an annual dividend of 5 per cent on the stock, and 5 per cent also on purchases made by stockholders and Patrons. Outside purchasers get a percentage, but they have a good patronage from them. Two commissions shipping goods with one Patrons only. I per cent on all shipments by them. They employ members on the book account. The past year they have employed a manager and two with clerks and more when needed. Five days in the week two and three hours each day have been selected and delivery goods within a radius of eight miles. The store is a welcome relative of business.—American Agriculturist.

POMONA GRANGES.

Their Province and Some of Their Duties Suggested.

It is quite evident to those who are familiar with the work of the Pomona grange, that the state that they are not accomplishing the highest purpose for which they were organized, and it is often the case that their work is confined wholly to the programme prepared at each quarterly meeting, and between sessions the influence of the Pomona has little felt as if there were no such organization. It is a province of the Pomona grange to have an oversight over the subordinate granges within its jurisdiction and where they are want to strengthen them. Particularly in the literary programme can the county secretary take his influence felt in building up the literary work of the Order. Furthermore, it is through the Pomona that the subordinate granges should co-operate to a higher and larger end in the accomplishment of any desired object. The committees on co-operation or legislation in the subordinate granges should be in touch with the same committees of the Pomona granges and should act weaken their influence by acting separately, as for instance, petitioning the legislature or congress for any desired action. Furthermore, the Pomona grange should have careful oversight over the subordinate granges in respect to degree work. While this pertains to the province of the county deputy, yet he may be greatly assisted by the officers of the Pomona in his work. Each of the subordinate degrees should be conferred, one at a session, perhaps, at the Pomona meeting, and it should be done with a view to perfecting the degree work. Of course the fifth degree will be conferred at least once a year in full form and as perfectly as it can be done. It is the special province of the Pomona grange to render all the assistance possible in every way to the work of the subordinate granges.

Heap Big Farmer.

It should not be forgotten that it was the farmers that, through the so called Granger movement, put it into the jurisprudence of this country that the state is greater than any of its creatures and has the right to regulate the business of any corporation it has created. That was disputed and litigated until the farmers made it law and stayed with it until the highest courts pronounced it good law. That is the foundation of all the laws we now have to regulate railways, life insurance companies and other corporations. The farmers in the seventies laid the foundation of the laws that President Roosevelt is using to curb corporations. The trouble is that we farmers do not appreciate our power. We are big bug odds the biggest frog to the pond, if we only knew it. If we would get together and hoist a little we could get the legislation we should have and officials would fall over themselves to enforce that legislation.—Farmer's Call.

RODENTS HOME-MAKING COSTLY.

Mouse Eats Will—Woman Loses $6,000 in Account of It.

The nibbling of a small mouse in an effort to obtain bits of paper with which to refill its home has cost Mrs. Ida Brown out of a rude little bequest of $6,000 which fell to her by the death of her husband. A lodgepoole will which was produced in Judge Wanhope's court in San Francisco lacked only the signature to make it valid, but the mouse ate the signature would naturally be laid been nibbled away, and the court ruled that it took care of Arpen-nath in his declining years and cared for his sister, who died ago, at the age of 77, found the nest of still in a battered drawer in his room. Accordingly Judge Wanhope gave his will, which was discovered on the great fire, and this is the sole disposition of the money it is known to now down on she. It is dated July 5, 1906, and leaves the entire Mrs. Brown, Arnoldsoch left about $2,000, and Julia Brown, who is a brother, who lives in Massachusetts.

SUICIDE OF TWO GIRLS.

One Kills Herself After Denying Self-Destruction Is Justifiable.

The drowning of Miss Sarah Onder in Kalamazoo river at Otsego, Mich., has given rise to comment by coroner Vickroy the suicide was made in the belief that Miss Dickinson, with whom Miss Onder had lived at Hastings. The night preceding Miss Dickinson's suicide the two young women engaged in an earnest discussion of whether suicide was ever justifiable. Miss Onder contended that it was. Miss Dickinson, and herself the following night. Miss Onder then came to Otsego, to live at the home of her brother-in-law, George E. Hudson. Saturday night she started a letter to a friend, but left it unfinished, explaining that she was nervous and would take a short walk before retiring. It Her dead body was found the next day in a clump of reeds in the river.

RIGHT MUST BE DONE ROOSEVELT DECLARES

Blames Congress with Another Stinging Message Demanding Action.

TO STOP INJUNCTION'S ABUSE.

Need of Meeting Popular Will and Curbing Lawless Wealth Is Pointed Out.

President Roosevelt sent a special message to Congress Monday asking that further power be extended to the Interstate Commerce Commission and that action be taken on pleas of Judge Lanham be acted upon forthwith. The President endorsed the plan which calls up close hatred, whether he belongs in the ranks of the rich or the poor, and declared correction either by labor or capital is the sacred duty of the hour. He also declared that the time has come if the ne'do-wells of the United States, "whose sons are fools" and whose daughters are foreign prize cooses," be "mistreating forest of the great cause."

The message was sent to Congress after the Senate had adjourned for the Senate and House were apart, that the message reached just sound attention.

Explaining Statements.

The President in his message demands the following legislation:

Restriction of federal injunctions.

Strengthening of antitrust law. Hepburn bill passed almost unchanged.

Child labor law for the District of Columbia.

Conservation of the water ways commission.

Tariff commission to clear the field for revision of the tariff schedules at the next session.

Financial legislation on asking commission to study the situation here and in Europe and report back for special suggestions.

Appropriation enough of the national parks commission establishment to take a most control once the weather cannot be changed.

Forest reserves in the Appalachian and Mountains.

Two measures are mentioned as being not certain of passage at this session and the President recommends their drastic amendment before adjournment.

One of these is a bill to limit the power of injunctions and authorize the issuance of court orders to relieve owners from which arise in labor disputes.

The other is a bill to strengthen the Sherman law, although at the same time, bolstering the constitutional rights of the government power to permit combinations that are in harmony with the law.

In connection with financial legislation the message recommends a commission of experts who shall thoroughly investigate the subject in Europe and report the great commission commerce abroad, so far as it may be necessary to do so, and will put our financial system on an elastic and safe basis.

The President's message reflects the wishes of the Republican leaders in Congress, who are in a position to carry forward to the end the Chelsea, one third of which was destroyed by fire recently, is a thriver city of Massachusetts, thousand more than three miles from the center of Boston. The place was settled in 1630 as Winnisimmet, and was a part of Boston from 1634 to 1738. It was incorporated as a city in 1857.

Among the places burned were: Frost Hospital, Children's Hospital, Tufts Public Library, New England Telephone and Telegraph Company's exchange and Austin & Company's rope factory, Chubb & Sohn Car Company's shops, County Savings Bank, Eastern Savings Bank, Chelsea Trust Company, Windsor National Bank, Independent Co-operative Bank and seven or eight churches.

COSTLY AND HANDSOME BUILDINGS BURNED IN THE DISASTROUS $10,000,000 FIRE WHICH SWEPT THE CITY OF CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.

CHELSEA SQUARE.

IN FIRE-SWEPT CHELSEA

Relief Measures on a Great Scale Are being Successfully Carried Out.

Systematic and orderly have assumed dimes in Immense Chelsea, Mass. Relief committees have sent in place perfect organization. Nearly homeless persons are homeless and destitute and providing shelter and food for their is a difficult problem. From all parts of the State of Massachusetts money, clothes and provisions have poured into the stricken city. It is said money that fully $1000,000 will be sacrificed for the relief of the sufferers.

Already 11 banks have been recovered enabled the value of the burned city and it is feared that this number will be greatly increased as the work of clearing away the debris goes forward. The flames swept over the doomed city with such rapidity that many persons were barely able to escape with their lives. The fleeing residents could not even give their homes half efforts. Some people rescued their possessions from their homes in the burnt district, in another section of the city to have from burned later when the flames swept entirely across the town.

Fires are going roughly forward to the rebuilding the burned district. Fortunately the securities of all the banks, which were burned, were found to be safe in the vaults and Chelsea will be able to pay all policies in full.

Editors Control House Report.

An authoritative announcement of the much-discussed report on the subject of the Panama canal, to be issued in a day or small one, has been decided upon by the President and Secretary Taft, whose reports appear to be March more than Friday. The report will contain two sums; house plan, House A, Eleven, Senate plan, Senate A, Twelve, the experts—E. S. Lorenzo, chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, Association of Consent Corps and Peter H. Dunn, engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, Mr. Lorenzo's report, Mr. Dunn's dissenters, both signed with a dissenting. Editors explained to them his method of overcoming the settling of the general consent of the Isthmian Canal Commission, which is by setting outside every thing objectionable to the Commission, which after the report from Sam Bonard and present sprigs and Mr. Dunn's report, Mr. Lorenzo's report about the effectiveness of the methods after the visual, soon in standstill. Ellison's mixture is one part water three of sand and five of gravel, through a half-inch sieve. The sand and gravel will be in place when the molds are set up. Lorenzo adds that the forms are entirely flexible, their sound and their estimated cost is $25,000 and the molds are to be used in large sections. Both the investigations show that the time stated by Ellison, Mr. Wilson from Mr. Ellison has not yet proved that the added day will not delay the hardening of the mixture, and cause to crumble that the stone still not flow uniformly.

Another Sleeping Sickness Case.

Ed Gray Gove, La., is the fourth reported American case of the disease known as sleeping sickness, from which over 5000 people have died in Central Africa, has resulted fatally, the victim being Frank Ellis, the 25-year-old son of a well-to-do merchant. The illness was of but a few weeks duration and was the first of a young man had ever experienced. He was one of a family of seven children, all of whom are healthy. The first and strongest suspicion was the unusual inability to sleep which came upon him soon after he was out walking. Until near the end he was able to eat and had little weakness. He was perfectly well, and among company a day or two before he went to sleep for the last time.

POLITICS AND POLITICIANS

NIGHT RIDERS FACE JUSTICE.

Scores of Kentucky Outlaws in Jail Awaiting Trial.

The night riders of Kentucky have passed the test time; now they are reaping the reward. Scores of them are now face to face with the machine-age of the law and can expect to pay paying heavy fines or serving long terms in prison.

In so far, at least, enough, the worst of the night riding took place in that part of Kentucky where there was the least preparation for it in the southwestern counties. The severity of the struggle of the night riders in Kentucky, in the counties where the barley district and the tobacco district, there eight and big prosecution, with some destruction of tobacco beds and some barn burning, but it was confined to the barley district that night riding became nothing more than destructive forays by brand and whipping, burning and even murder.

Calloway County was one of the worst affected. Outrages were numerous and many specially would have repeated the throne and governed with her commonwealth sovereignty, had it not been for Judge Wells and a few men like him. Gradually he accumulated evidence; gradually he seized ringleaders and a revelation of the whole scheme of outlawry. The result is that a dozen men are in jail, charged with the crime of the county jail are jammed and the criminal docket full.

Perhaps the most startling of the confessions and affidavits in possession of the State's attorney is that of Murray, a town of about 2,000 persons, was marked for destruction on the night of March 23, from this affidavit, taken by a man who was forced on his knees to make the night riders' oath. It appears that the Calloway County gang were to have been reinforced by 250 armed men from Trigg County, and that a raid was to have been made which would have left Murray in ashes.

On the night before the contemplated raid, however, the Calloway County gang held a meeting and decided that it would be better to defer their assault for a few nights or weeks. Judge Wells had learned of their pians and had warned the men of Murray to be on their guard. A signal of security, or, if danger threatened, a signal to the town and they had placed a cutting fire so that it could serve the streets and protect the town. The conspirators realized that any attempt to burn Murray would be met with a rain of bullets from scores of them. Messengers were dispatched to the Trigg County band, and it required a great deal of persuasion to deter them from making the long journey of consequences.

Now that so many men have been arrested and the names of scores of others are in the hands of the officers, it is believed that night riding in Kentucky is a thing of the past.

Illinois Oil Inspection.

In Louisiana it is estimated that a score of small towns were destroyed or partially wrecked. They include Amite City, Amelia, Franklinton, Independence, Grover, Melvin, Lorenzo, Pine Ridge, Ignatius Landing, Entreville, Greenville and Kentwood, Miss., the report seriously damaged by the storm. Amite, a county seat in southeastern Louisiana, was almost destroyed. The dead are estimated at forty-five and the injured at seventy-five.

At McAlto, Miss., eight are reported to have been killed, at Sullivan Landing, eleven were killed; at Parlors Landing, Miss., twelve were killed and the storm swept across from one to the Beulbe, some from many miles wide and over the entire country.

The cyclone struck Dora, Ala., known also as Bucula, a mining town in the Pelaco, Berkin and Bessemer District, Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Ten or twenty people "disappeared" standing on the siding were blown off the track and scattered in Alabama. It was found that the storm struck Albertville, Ala., at 4 o'clock and demolished a large Methodist church in the town. Winchester, Miss., a small town, is reported to have been wiped out, two persons are known to have been killed.

Its tornado destroyed the eastern portion of Dupont, a town twenty miles southeast of Mobile, killing W. Wallace, a druggist, and injuring several others. Practically all the residences on the east side of Dora were destroyed, at least its employes or thirty hour employed over the country in the vicinity of Dora. The points of the storm were several hundred yards wide, Oak Grove, a town east of Clarksville, on the Tennessee and Pacific Railroad, is reported as most destroyed, many houses being demolished.

Reports from Elmstown, Ala., say that a severe storm swept that place demolishing many buildings. Loss: aggregating $20,000 resulted from the tornado at Valley Springs, near Sugar Falls. Although twenty-two buildings were destroyed there was no loss of life. The Methodist Episcopal Church was completely demolished.

From Lakeda, N. D., comes news that Nels, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Helmsley, of Ellsworth, was killed by a golf ball. The boy was playing golf on the slough a short distance from his home when the ball struck him on the temple, little follow up and blow him into the water. He was drowned.

The gale blew down our iron smokestack back of the Plankers Hotel, at Ludington, Friday, and broke up and some damage in different parts of the city.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The Antrim county republican club was organized at Bellaire last week. C. L. Dailey of Mancelona was made president, county clerk Posey secretary and R. S. Emerson treasurer. It is the intention to hold annual meetings and a banquet once a year, which is more than can be said of the Traverse Lincoln Club.

Traverse City Record: H. Montague, deputy grand master of the Masonic order of Michigan, will go to Grand Rapids tomorrow and while there will be made a 32nd degree Mason. Mr. Montague, who has had the degrees already, will be grand master of the state next year and as there has never been a grand master who has not received 32 degree, he does not desire to break the record.

The annual meeting of the Northern Michigan Bee Keepers' Association was held here Wednesday and Thursday at Manistee, and was a session of great interest to people engaged in the production and sale of honey. New officers were elected as follows: President, E. D. Townsend, Honor; vice president, C. F. Smith, of Cheboygan; secretary and treasurer, E. E. Covey, of Petoskey. The next meeting of the association will be held at Traverse City in April of 1909. The association now has one hundred members, all working to the best interests of the organization. At the Manistee session a great many ideas were advanced for the keeping and raising of bees, and several new inventions pertaining to the handling of honey were shown. Prizes were awarded for the best honey and beeswax displayed. The records for 1907 show about 600,000 pounds of honey produced by members of the association during the year. The national association will meet in Detroit, Oct. 13 and 14, 1908.

—Dr. Allan M. Wilkinson, who has been the Beaver Island physician and surgeon for several years, has sold out there, and will remove to Charlevoix next week. He has rented the Miller cottage on the north side, and will office with his brother, Dr. Frank Wilkinson.

—Frank Metcalf has returned from his visit to the National Capital, and comes home a better American than ever for having stood at the tomb of Washington, and under the mighty dome of the capitol. He was in Washington about two weeks, and saw very nearly all there was to see.

—The democrat county convention was held in Dr. G. W. Crouter's office last Monday. Dr. Crouter of this city, and W. J. Lewis, of Boyne, were elected delegates to the State convention. To the congressional convention, Jas. Hokes, Dr. J. B. Thiele, John Monroe, F. H. Shepard, Thos. Bacot.

—Andrew O'Donnell McCabe died at his home on South State street last Sunday at the ripe old age of 95. Mr. McCabe came to Charlevoix in 1869, coming from Northport, where he had lived since 1858. He was a shoemaker by trade and formerly worked at that, both at Northport and here, but of recent years has done nothing but a little market gardening.

—Rev. H. H. Bayless, pastor of the Charlevoix Baptist church, writes in from Reed City, where he has been recuperating. After expressing his gratitude to the people of Charlevoix for kindness shown during his winter illness, Mr. Bayles gives us the novel intelligence that since the absence of himself and wife their infant son has died. So, and Mrs. Bayles will never here today, and services will be held in the Baptist church next Sunday as usual.

—Chicago Inter-Ocean: Allie Sprague, a Charlevoix professional roller skater, set a new record in the one-mile race at Riverview rink last night for the American Canadian championship, going the n. o. in 2:32. The amateur record for the distance is held by Willie Robinson of Chicago, who recently set the figure at 2:24 4-5. In the afternoon races Rodney Peters of St. Louis qualified for the finals by winning the preliminary heat in 2:37 2-5. The final of the mile race will be held Wednesday night.

—It having been claimed that at the memorial services last year several soldiers graves were overlooked in the distribution of flowers, if so it was a mistake perhaps occasioned by the obscure location or neglected condition of the graves. The committee will certainly regret if from any cause a soldier or sailors grave should be overlooked. They would suggest that all graves should be so decorated if possible and request that the committee that places the marking flags will have no trouble to distinguish them.

—The second total loss of the season in the little schooner H. H. Becker, caught by Thursday's gale off Sheboygan, Wis, and turning turtle a few minutes after the crew was rescued. The vessel became water-logged and her distress could be seen from the shore. The life-saving crew put out and succeeded in taking the men off not a moment too soon. The tug Iola pulled the capsized hulk close to the pier, where she settled to the bottom. The Becker is 108 feet long and was built in 1867. She was owned by C. H. Freyberg of Sheboygan. The Becker is well known at this port.

—The St. James fishing tug Cheese was Lena over Sunday getting her boiler repaired.

—A large delegation of Charlevoix Chapter, O. E. S. went to East Jordan yesterday to attend the county convention of the Lady Masons. Several of the male members went along to regulate the proceedings and add Masonic dignity to the event. Charlie See, the Worthy Patron headed the male bunch, the sisters meekly following the bell weather.

A VETERAN DEAD.

Passing Away of the Oldest Editor in the Grand Traverse Region.

Elvin L. Sprague, founder and editor of the Traverse Bay Eagle and the Daily Eagle, died suddenly last Thursday morning at his home in Traverse City. Death was due to congestion of the lungs. Mr. Sprague had been in poor health for the past year but kept up his active editorial duties. It is doubtful if there was a better known man in the north than Elvin Sprague. In politics he was a Democrat. Although not seeking office he has held a number in the township and city. He was very active in library work and the present system is due largely to his efforts. He was vice-president of the Old Settler's association and a few days ago aided in making plans for the annual meeting June 10. He was prominent in Masonic circles, and was also a leader in church, being senior warden and lay reader in Grace Episcopal church.

Elvin L. Sprague was born in Gill, Mass., Dec. 22, 1830, and with his parents moved to Washtenaw county, Michigan, in 1836. He went to Elk Rapids and established the Weekly Eagle in March, 1864. Four years later he moved the paper to Traverse City and changed its name to the Traverse Bay Eagle. In 1893 he issued Sprague's History of Grand Traverse and Leelanau County. Mr. Sprague's only daughter, Miss Gertrude Sprague, is managing editor of the Daily Eagle. One son, Edward, Grand Rapids, is also left. The office of the Secretary feels most keenly the death of this good man, a warm personal friend for more than forty years. In 1868 the writer of this was a journeyman printer on the Eagle, and Elk Rapids. In the fall of that year the Eagle was moved to Traverse City, and W. A. Smith went with it, and was the newsman when the first copy of the Eagle was printed in Traverse City.

Elvin L. Sprague was indeed the "grand old man" of Northern Michigan journalism. He had as few faults as any man we ever knew, and his chief fault was a generosity that sometimes passed the bounds of prudence. He loved his God and worshipped Him; he loved his fellowman and was always ready to help him.

The death of Mr. Sprague leaves W. A. Smith, editor and publisher of the Charlevoix SENTINEL, the oldest editor in continuous service, north of Mecosta county in either peninsula.

Circuit Court.

The May term of the circuit court was a brief duration, the calendar being cleared in one day—Monday.

Pollesky, Stefnin and the Indian Shagonaby, were given probationary liberty. The case against Cassidy was wiped out by a nolle prosse.

The saloon cases of Whitbeck and Anderson and Van Buskirk were continued to next term. In the case against Meyer & Neubert, defendants plead guilty; sentence deferred.

In Chas. H. Werner vs. W. J. Lewis; case taken under advisement.

Carlson vs. Carlson, decree of divorce granted.

Boyne City Tanning Co. vs. Tencate, to quiet title, decree granted.

All other cases go over.

Heretofore it has been the rule of the court, in divorce decrees, to restrain the party in the wrong from marrying for two years from date of decree. The court on Monday announced that its future policy would be to restrain both parties for a period of not less than three months, but usually three months to one year.

WARDEN AND FISHERMEN.

Mr. Pierce Meets the Fishermen, and the Conference Results in a Better Understanding.

By far the most important conference of its kind ever held in Northern Michigan, was that of last Thursday night, when State Game and Fish Warden Pierce met the Charlevoix fishermen at Tugmen's hall. Mr. Pierce was accompanied by his two chief deputies, which made the conference all the more prolific of results in the matter of "getting together."

About forty fishermen,—representing tug and gasoline boat owners,—were present when Mr. Pierce and his deputies arrived from the Elston Hotel in charge of Capt. Gelken, Manager Olaf Nordrum, of the Booth Co., and a SENTINEL representative. Capt. Gelken introduced Mr. Pierce, and in his response he put the fishermen on "Easy street" at once. Instead of the relentless, powerful and autocratic official that some of the fishermen had learned to regard him, they found him to be a considerate, conservative, and sympathetic friend, who is charged with the enforcement of the law as he finds it, and means to enforce it, but with judgment and mercy, so far as duty permits.

This conference was brought about by the recent "squall" of activity in the warden's department. Several fisherman, and shippers have been fined for having undersized fish in their possession—caught, by the way in a legal mesh. And just here we find the meat of the cocoanut. The State prescribes the size of the mesh, but if a lake trout weighing less than a pound and a quarter gets "gilled" in this legal net, the fisherman gets into court. And they get gilled, as every fisherman knows,—both the fisherman and the trout. Here is where the trouble is, and those people down in the State house, who imagine that they are statesmen, and who think they know about all there is to know about everything, are responsible for the condition.

Mr. Pierce conceded that there were manifest inconsistences in the law, but he was not there to discuss that phase of the subject. He expressed himself freely also as what he thought ought to be done in framing without at any time criticizing the law makers. And those views were in accord with those of the fishermen.

And then Mr. Pierce cut himself loose on the matter of spawn gathering, as at present operated by the U. S. fish commission. He was very emphatic in his condemnation of the present plan, whereby a few rugs are chosen to the exclusion of the many other plants. This Mr. Pierce claimed, was unfair, as some of the heaviest catches of the year are those brought in during the closed season. He proposes to use his influence to change this plan, and furthermore, he pledged himself to recommend such changes in the law as would, in some degree at least, relieve the fishermen of responsibility in the matter of under-sized fish caught in a legal net. Mr. Pierce is fully in sympathy with the fishermen on all the points mentioned above, but made no concessions whatever, as his province is not to interpret the law, but to enforce it.

Game Warden Pierce impressed the fishermen as a just, but fair and sympathetic man. On the other hand, Mr. Pierce expressed himself to the writer of this, as more than pleased with the fairness, candor and intelligence displayed by the fishermen in the conference. The fishermen of this section and the warden have had a heart-to-heart talk; they understand each other better than ever before and a mutual pledge of co-operation is the outcome.

The meeting was profitable to all concerned, in that it gave the warden an opportunity to absorb the fact that the fishermen represent a most important industry, and that they are, as a rule, intelligent and progressive citizens. It was beneficial also, in demonstrating the fact that the game warden has no horns nor cloven feet.

HE DESERVES SUCCESS.

"Dolly" Hamill, the famous "Inland Route" man of Petoskey, who has by his own indomitable energy and genius built up a pleasure route that is classed as one of the greatest attractions of the straits region, was in town Tuesday. Mr. Hamill has arranged to make his route more than ever attractive, and has put his boats in better shape than ever for the season of 1908. We have lived in Northern Michigan for forty years, and know pretty well every part of the region, and we say unreservedly that Hamill's Inland Route is the most enjoyable summer trip that can be taken. Heretofore Charlevoix people have had to depend upon very close connections between the regular P. M. morning train and the G. R. & I. at Petoskey, in making this very interesting trip. Now Mr. Hamill has arranged for the "dummy" leaving here at 7:15 a. m.

It may be of interest to our readers to know that A. I. Hamill got his start in Charlevoix twenty-five years ago. At that time he was practically a resident of Petoskey, but kept a summer peanut stand near the bridge in the village of Charlevoix.

Assuming that Dolly came within the provisions of the non-resident ordinance, the matter was swooped down upon him for the $25 license. Dolly was then, as he is now, a shrewd guy. The day before he had called on the village clerk and paid one dollar poll tax, taking the usual receipt therefor. When the constable made his "break" Dolly flashed his receipt, which was legal evidence of citizenship. And so Dolly got his start in Charlevoix.

But Dolly has a history back of this. In 1872, when a boy of ten, he wandered to Beaver Island on a boat. He was left there, and he was broke. J. H. Dormer, then the leading fish dealer and merchant of the island, gave him a quarter with which to buy a meal at Mrs. Lefty's boarding house, hard by. Dolly bought fifteen cents worth of variety bigger-the-lots and a slab of navy plug. The nuts were unsatisfying, and he bit a hunk out the navy plug.

About that time the old propeller Cambria came in after wood, and Dolly stowed himself away among the freight. When the boat was well out in the lake the runaway was discovered by the purser and warped to get off at St. Helena, the next port. Meantime he got "wise" to the kind hearted cook on board, and got a liberal hand-out. At St. Helena he went ashore as he was bid, but just as the boat cast loose he stowed aboard again. Again he was discovered, and with the admirable nerve that has since served him so well, he gave them the slope that he had got off as directed, but that no one had told him not to get aboard again. At Mackinaw Island he went ashore, but determined to have a steamboat of his own sometime.

Now Dolly owns a steamboat on the Inland Route a $10,000 home in Petoskey, beside other things.

Another Boat for the East Jordan Route.

Capt. H. C. Plum, Mike Green and Patsy Flanagin equal partners in the deal, left here Monday for Chicago to bring back the steamer Lena Knoblock, which they have bought.

The boat will be put on the Charlevoix-East Jordan route, leaving Charlevoix at 7 a. m. and 1:30 p. m.

The Lena Knoblock is of 55 net tons measurement, 75 feet long and 15 foot beam. She was built in 1906. Capt. Plum expects to have her on the route this week or next.

Suicide at Boyne Falls.

Mr. Slater, superintendent of schools at Boyne Falls, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head last Sunday morning. No cause is given for the act.

Mr. Slater was a young man, and came to Boyne Falls from Mt. Pleasant.

Walter Slater was only 19 years of age, but despite his youth he had filled his position at the head of the village schools satisfactorily. Friday he attended school and conducted an examination and it was upon these examination papers that he had been working when he shot himself. The responsibilities at-

The Chauffeur and the Jewels

By Faith Morgan Willett

Copyright, 1906, by J. B. Lippincott Company
All rights reserved.

In line with the best modern productions of fiction which are appearing this serial is timely, intensely entertaining and dramatic, and should be received with enthusiasm by every reader who delights in a bright, interesting story. It is entitled, "THE CHAUFFEUR AND THE JEWELS," and is written from the automobile element, which is fascinating, has a wide range in land and ocean travel and includes scenes and incidents of varied interest. The gifted authoress is EDITH MORGAN WILLETT, the story is finely written and interest is maintained to the very last chapter.

The heroine is Annette Bancroft, the daughter of a retired army officer, whose home is in Washington. Miss Bancroft and her mother plan a wonderful year visiting England in May, summer in Switzerland, the Tyrol in September and the winter in the Riviera, where their automobile was bought. They are robbed in a mysterious manner of very valuable jewels, and this incident forms the central point in the romance. Complications ensue and around these are grouped plot and counterplot and numerous incidents that are intensely depicted. There is a strong element of love and devotion all through the story, ending in a dramatic way that is original and striking.

This serial has a further element of fashionable society life that lends a pleasing variation to its development. The double impersonation, the loss of the jewels, the rapid change in scene, all continue to maintain the interest, and the result is a story of superior power and merit.

(CHAPTER I.)

Springtime in Washington—a year's change! The chorus of a grasshopper—so strong and so lively—chirped from the dried blades of the brown spires and thirsty jointed pampas-grass in the parkway and sang to the dusty, jaded, glittering, mahogany-shaded, knee-deep sign in the shadow of the Bancroft house.

It was with the subtlety of utter enjoyment that Annette at the—then of her twenty years, and coming back as the religious exponent of the same—looked upon the sign in the twin interiors of perfect motion and perfect joy.

Long she stared through the air of spring ahead, examining space in the way of only kindness to the hurt. After the girl's heart reflected a merry wind, now stopped by a window, and again chill with the breath of January ice fields. Behind his chaps, soft but very musical, and sung with a confused, composite measure of delights which had been wrought into the delicious words. About the triangular eyes of the motor painted in Hayes' and Lincoln—Miss Bancroft shivered slightly—there would be the Channel crossing, Southampton, Liverpool, and eventually—home.

Home. To the girl in the nonsense that magic word signified chiefly one spot in the street, and of Washington's unfashionable thoroughfares, where lay—unknown to her—twenty-four hours with another with affective familiarity; where walls are nearest, and ceilings low, and the smell of cookery haunts the air.

It was in one of these so-called "dwelling residences" that Annette's father—a retired army officer—had lived for years and into little bonbons had been keeping bachelor's hall without her for the past year.

Hence, Major Bancroft was a wise parent, as well as a loving father and mother, when, one morning, and when Mrs. Dick Waring, who was a handsome woman of his late wife's—and, some day, as they to boot, had taken him off forcibly, to the Vienna one fine day of the previous spring, and begged "the loan of that circus girl of his for twelve months on the other side of the ocean," he had said "Yes" without hesitation.

After all, where a man has a penchant for doing his own business, and divides his time satisfactorily between the club and his newspaper, he only laughs at "the silly, inflammable—especially but always inflammable—and dowdy wife who writes regularly and dowdy—but quite an affectionate—letter about an opportunity for the child! Europe at twenty—and wishing—and—wishing—to crown with an enervating chaperone to offset its virtues.

"You know," Mrs. Waring had informed her presumptuous sister over tea, "we generally will Julia—and, any way, one gets tired of travelling forever with a girl who thinks she ought to ever show over until, as I've just said, I've forgotten what Rich departed this life." Forgotten what of that man who was dead to speak of and are such poor travelers. You mean! Nothing ever to be left behind—nothing will you, dear, and packing my trunks? We'll have a beautiful time together and see everything within reach."

And so indeed they did, the wonderful year holding a chaplet of experiences that Annette, like a good girl, wished to ever cherishing over and over.

England in May; summer in Switzerland; the Tyrol through September; then Italy—and a winter at the Riviera—where the automobile had been bought.

At the most explicit desire of Mrs. Bancroft's county of intellectuals, a voice broke in upon them.

"Where are we now?" it demanded, in Mrs. Waring's clear, treacherous tones, that carried the whole of the "dwelling" in it. "What's that in the distance, Sarah? Is it Windsor Castle? Annette, Annette, I'm sure, to Annette, "There, to your right, see!"

Annette opened her eyes. Beside her the chauffeur was leaning forward and pointing to distant battlements. Far, alone the road on a rocky height the castle towered in the sunlight, and, in the ceiling the city huddled.

Then, leaning on the front seat of the motor had turned their heads and were staring up.

"What's the use of stopping" and overhauls that old dog?" demanded, the chauffeur, turned his chief personage who was grasping the steering wheel—"that we've got to reach Dover this afternoon, we'd better push straight on and have our nerves and muscles and temper for the authority. What say, Gussie?"

"All right," hesitatingly agreed Mrs. Waring, and the car shot on. "Mr. Hotel is not an admirer of ruins," remarked the chauffeur auto-voice, and then, as his companion acquiesced with a whimsical shake of the head, he plunged his lazily-covered throttlers and set soaring at the Englishman's square back with eyes which glittered behind their goggles.

The chauffeur himself was not an inviting figure, in spite of the gaiety of his heavy "hood" and brigand-like moustache, not to mention an automobile livery which could not quite obliterate the graceful lines of his person and the sensitiveness of his face.

Six weeks ago it was that he had appeared miraculously on the side, shadow, strange period steps of the Hotel de Paris, at Monaco, of the Grand Duke of Hesse, Waring was descending them, and, approaching, had lifted his hat to the girl, and, in her a connected motive, in whom, in her personality there had been for twenty years in a trip which most, have rich and poor, high and low, rich and poor, displaying nerves, resources and science in sudden emergencies, bringing into intimate fellowship with Hardcoke and "unknown" Bancroft, and, in the end, the object of his endeavor by the earnest, had its influence in Grace Waring, who—engaged the person on the spot.

And so it happened Sarah—altered the most "Sarah" of her upper thirties—had been left behind in Monaco, and, Mrs. Waring had come to Nice, where, Mr. Gerald Hunt, an ancient ally of Mrs. Waring's, and, besides being second son of Lord Hay, and a member of the Commons, appearing on the scene, the only Mr. Hunt, who was a bachelor and had the manner and the society of Miss Bancroft.

A month is a long enough time to regret an opportunity, and, in Mrs. Waring's diary it will be found recorded that there was a regret, and, that, in the end, the regret being shifted through space in a comfortable armchair—two or three days later—the able individual who has apparently been every where and—anything and—the well and—anything—and, also about it all its end quickened, gaining a certain enthusiasm in the marvelous chemical solution in existence, capable of depriving a man—any man—of his identity and turning him into a bit of military mechanism, neither more nor less. I served in the ranks for two years.

He stopped short, and as suddenly the light, the vigor of an unwonted exhaustion, went out of his face, which settled into its habitual impassivity. Replacing his goggles, he lowered his cap over his eyes, and folding his arms sat looking imperturbably ahead down the long road, an motionless leather-covered figure suggestive of motor cars and naught beside.

This attitude was not conducive to further confidences, but Annette Bancroft at twenty-one had all the instincts of a born biographer, and when once on the scent of possible romance was not to be turned aside.

"I suppose," she hazarded at last, jaiting the loose ends of his unfinished story, "that after you left the army you took this job?"

Her companion hesitated, twiddling his long, brigand-like moustache.

"Well, not immediately," he responded guardedly, still speaking in French. "I got down here by degrees; that is the way it generally happens. Let me see—I started by tutoring a bit in Switzerland; the last but last consumption and died in less than a year. After that one took up what came easiest. The translation of German romances in such, but" he laughed suddenly, a frank, gay, wonderfully lightheartedness—"in the course of it I checkered, career I have been respectively guide, carrier, courier, and even cabman on occasions, besides officiating as valet for various rare individuals—and, of course, including His Highness the Prince del Pino."

He paused with a faint shrug of the shoulders.

For an instant the girl gazed at him with eyes that were unmistakably dilated. "How interesting!" she murmured at last, inadequately.

The chauffeur made a slight bow.

"Hours already" he ejaculated, apologetic and gaining a smile and gaining them relapsing into his careful, considerate tones English.

"Are you our auberge at the end of the little street? Here we have no made the run?" He pulled out his watch. "Good! Seventy kilometres in as many minutes!"

"Why! Sarah! sang the motor, its breath expiring like a wounded sky-rocket, as it drew up in front of a red brick house with "Pension" on it.

"Sarah!" called Mrs. Waring peremptorily.

She stood, minus her dustcloak and goggles, a dazzling tailor-made vision in a big bunch of violets at her waist, calling with unwonted carelessness to the chauffeur, who was leaning to her hid ing. Then, avoiding his hand, regardless of the Englishman beside her, she landed in the doorway, and an imaginative observer, who was pressing forward to her assistance, she surprised into the ground and passed into the Master Himself began to make amends.

At these movements for the betterment of our neighbors and our race, the Waring's mind was with a fool of herself." but the man whom she had delighted to honor stood by the motor rooted to the ground, gazing in a rapt, enchanted way at his leather-covered gloves.

MAKE ELEPHANTS SNEEZE

Boys Throw Chlorine Compound in Animals with Startling Result.

Two small boys, names unknown, but who are much desired by the keepers of the Bronx zoo, threw several hundred ounces of chlorine gas into the lion house, and made several thousand persons sneeze and cough and cry and generally annoy lounging about a general old, sun-lit place in New York. The chlorine was a large quantity of Chinese stuff, an innocent appearing white powder guaranteed to produce more sneezes to the minute than the worst kind of a cold in the head.

Since the time under the East River was opened thousands of Brooklynites have found it convenient to explore the heretofore unknown fastnesses of the Bronx zoo. When the crowd was at its largest the youngsters with the small wormed their way into the elephant house, and, with a breath, wafted a quantity of the pic-pic into the air. At once the rumors began to source. Sol Gunda, the frisk elephant, ceased his regular frolicking exhibition, made an awful grimace and then gave vent to a "sneezing" that shook the roof. Sol gave another sneeze, and the rhinoceros followed with snorts worthy their size, while Mandy, the dromedary, exploded with a terrific paroxysm. Meanwhile the visitors continued to sneeze.

At first it was taken as a joke and then the animals began to show signs of pain. The lions sneezed and the tigers sneezed, and the bears sneezed, and the monkeys sneezed, and the birds sneezed, and the elephants sneezed, and the rhinoceros sneezed, and the hippopotamus sneezed, and the camels sneezed, and the zebras sneezed, and the antelopes sneezed, and the deer sneezed, and the sea lions sneezed, and the seals

THE PARTY OF LINCOLN

Representative Dalzell Summarizes Its Achievements.

TRUE REPUBLICAN POLICIES.

Wonderful Constructive Statesmanship Shown In Both External and Domestic Affairs—Most Progressive Period In Our History.

We are about to enter upon a campaign for the presidency of the United States and for the control of this house of representatives. The issue will be to some extent the platforms of the contending parties, to some extent perhaps the personality of the candidates, but mainly, I take it, the party records. And party records are to be judged not alone by party professions or by achievements even. Regard must be had to the consistency of party pledges, to the measure of party loyalty thereto and to the fidelity with which party pledges have been kept.

The Republican party invites the issue upon every ground—on that of its professions, its achievements, its consistency and its loyalty to principles and pledges.

The policies of the last fifty years, what are they?

It is no exaggeration to say that they are well large in the world's ledger, not so belonging to the United States alone, but as bearing on the destinies of mankind. Like some great monument, long dominating the landscape, the most conspicuous of these policies is that which in simple terms declared the bondage to be for the emancipation proclamation of the Republican politician, Abraham Lincoln.

Was the enforcement of the national authority a beneficent policy—the means not with its awful record of human sacrifice, enforced by the loss of thousands of men every two years Republican politicians, who in camp, on the battlefield and in prison hold down their lives a chilling sacrifice that the Union might endure?

Are the Democratic policies whereby a broken and disrupted Union was reconstructed and slaty whose relations with their elder states had been disunited were again brought into harmonious relations, so that together they renewed their onward march under a common flag to a common destiny?

Were they Democratic policies which wrote into the constitution the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth amendments?

Was it Democratic policy that conferred on the black man of the south for the protection of his new born freedom the right of suffrage?

Was that a Democratic policy which grouped anew the enterprise of Hamilton and in harmony therewith preserved our splendid credit both at home and abroad by the prompt payment of the national debt?

Was the establishment of the gold standard a Democratic policy?

Was the maintenance and extension and strengthening of our protective system a Democratic policy?

Were the policies Democratic that adapted our institutions to new and unprecedented conditions in carrying the civil government safely to their deeds, as well in peace and liberty and enlightenment to our new possessions in the Caribbean and in the orient, of were they the policies of the Republican party, which has never found a problem in government, however new, that it was not able successfully to solve?

The last eleven years of Republican rule mark a new era in the history of the nation. They are crowded with achievements which have called for the highest type of constructive statesmanship. Both as to internal and external affairs they loom large in the annals of world politics. They remade the world's map. With the close of the Spanish war the United States bade farewell to all possible isolation and became an active participant in universal rule.

Under Republican administration Porto Rico has been started upon a career both of material prosperity and of intellectual and moral growth.

The Philippines are rapidly advancing on their way in preparation for ultimate self government.

Great contributions have been made to the assurance of the world's peace.

In violation of all the precedents of diplomatic history, but pursuant to the division of humanity, President Roosevelt dared lobbly to suggest the cessation of the bloody war between Russia and Japan and as a result of his efforts brought about a treaty of peace.

Not as conspicuous, but no less bold and philanthropic, was his action in laying his hand on the great anthracite coal strike and rescuing our people from a calamity incapable of measurement.

It remained for a Republican administration to enter upon the realization of the world's dream of 100 years, for the most unbridled conception of single or big pecuniary power known, the project to replace by friendly contests in carry the world's commerce the wales of two oceans allies to each other place the unending cities sang together.

This record of fidelity to party pledges on the part of the Republican party and of efficiency in this as accomplished will appeal to the confidence of the people in spite of the carping criticism and unreasonable fault finding of the democratic party, which when in power did nothing to carry into effect the law.

Materially speaking the last two Republican administrations mark the most prosperous period in our history.

Keep Talk in Mind.

It would not be forgotten that the man who takes advantage of others will take advantage of you if he ever finds it conveniently profitable to do so, no matter how consistently he may pretend to be your friend.

Softening Water.

Hard water can be softened by adding to a bushel of water enough tincture of benzoin to make it of a cream color. This also has a tonic and exhilarating effect.

PARTY OF STABILITY.

Why the Republicans Should Again Be Successful.

(By Hon. Charles E. Hughes, governor of New York.)

The Republican party is the party of stability and the party of progress. Its fundamental policies have delineated the course of the nation's history. They include the policy of union in opposition to every destructive sentiment or disrupting force. They include the policy of establishing the national credit. It upon a sure foundation in opposition to those financial vagaries which, included at one time with seductive argument and fervid appeal as the hope of the people, are now by common consent relegated to our museum of political absurdities, wholly amusing save for one keen appreciation of the peril we narrowly escaped. And they also include the policy of protection to American industry in the interest of the wage earners of our country and in order to safeguard those higher American standards of living which our people will never permit to be reduced. The Republican party has maintained the national honor, and no dictation from abroad or elsewhere has attained the hapless levels of humiliable purpose and distinguished achievement. The great aspirations of the party are the priceless possession of the American people, who, forgetful of partisan affiliations, are grateful that the violence of compelling duty not derelict the nation of their leadership.

The Republican party today is charged with weighty responsibility. By reason of its ascendancy it conceives nothing can be accomplished save through its instrumentality. It has been the party of constructive statesmanship.

We are contemplating a new administration at the close of one which to a degree almost unprecedented has impressed its popular imagination and won the confidence of the people. The country is under lasting obligation to President Roosevelt for his vigorous opposition to abuses and for a strong, impulsive but fine sense of movements for their correction. Differences of opinion now, as always, exist with regard to the best means of solving some of the extremely difficult problems that are presented. But those who correctly desire progress must recognize the element of our society on its necessary foundations of fair dealing and condition of equal rights appreciate the great service he has rendered and the fundamental importance of the purposes he has had in view. We shall have in the next campaign a notable vantage ground, gained through the general admiration of his strong personality and the popular appreciation of the honesty of his desire to promote the righteous conduct of affairs and the welfare of his fellow men.

HARMONY OF INTERESTS.

Benefits of the Protective System Extend to All Classes.

And the same philosophy that were true when McKinley spoke twenty years ago are true today. We are not in conflict. We are in harmony. We must not be in conflict. We must be one in our civic way demanding our own rights and protecting the rights of others and in this way we shall continue to build up our country, and the America of tomorrow will be still greater and better than the America of today.

If you attempt to deny to your neighbor protection on the coal and the iron and the wool and the other of the articles produced by him, he will retaliate by seeking to deny to you the protection that is afforded you upon the products of your factories, and the result will be that there will again be want and hunger and idleness home in this country which have been so plenty and happiness and bright, cheerful firesides.

Let us again resolve here and now that we will continue to protect the classes and all sections of this country equally so that the protective system shall continue to be for the benefit of all. Let us know no south, no north, no east, no west, but let us realize the truth of that motto, "United we stand, divided we fall."—Congressman Dumont.

Republican Principles.

The Republican party has many candidates from which to choose a president of the United States. It has only one set of principles. They are consistent with each other; they have been written in our platforms and redeemed in legislation; they are embodied in the wise enactments of the last half century; they are progressive, medical and solving problems as they arise. The principles of the Republican party are down to us through all the years of our history illustrated in the great measures which have contributed to our national glory and to the strength and permanency of our free institutions. Through successive administrations their wisdom has been vindicated, and they will receive a new vindication and indorsement when the people speak in November next.—Congressman Dalzell.

Tariff Revision.

There is no longer any doubt that when the tariff is revised by the Republican party it will be on a moderate and reasonable basis, the minimum duties not far apart from the present schedules of the Dingley law.

Result Not in Doubt.

Although the campaign will really not be ended until election day there is but little doubt that as soon as the Republican ticket is announced it will well be as well known as in November.

Flattery.

"That superfluous editorial of yours this morning," said the caller, "was a pale imitation of Macaulay."

"A hit!" replied the editor, "you are a good for flattery."

"I did not intend to flatter you," replied the caller lofty.

"Me? Oh, dear me! I was thinking of Mac, sure."

Adversity.

Adversity is the diamond dust heaven polishes its jewels with.—Leighton.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

Treating Overheated Horses.

As soon as a horse gives evidence of suffering from heat exhaustion remove his bits and remove the harness. Spray him along the back with ice cold water and sponge it freely to the poll with a large or a sponge. Let him stand out of doors in a shady place, and with such treatment a recovery will usually come quickly.

If the exhaustion has become more pronounced and the horse's eyes are bloodshot, his nostrils very red and his pulse is beoming strong and fast, give him, in addition to the treatment mentioned, four ounces of good whisky in a pint of water or one ounce of aromatic spirits of ammonia and two ounces of spirits of nitrous ether in six quart of water (preserve the flower) hourly until the pulse becomes normal, the horse lacks his head up and stops panting.—Farm Progress.

Cure For Curl Leaf of Peach.

Professor Taft of the Michigan Agricultural college has announced an important discovery in that curl leaf, which has been so destructive among peaches for several years, can be successfully treated by spraying. He estimates that fully nine-tenths of the crop of Elberta peaches are annually destroyed by curl leaf and might have been saved by spraying.

The solution used is one pound of copper sulphate dissolved in twenty-five gallons of water, to which has been added one pound of quicklime. The solution must be carefully prepared, the lime being added until the spray, as a single and escaping treatment might spread the disease. It has been found that spraying with the solution in the fall is as effective as when it is done later. It may be used at any time after the leaves fall from the trees before the buds begin to swell in the spring.

Pink Eye in Horses.

Dr. Sisseel, the well known writer on veterinary topics, describes pink eye in horses as follows: "Pink eye in horses is an inflamed membrane covering the eyes, some or less inflammation of the membranes of the eyes and eyelids which causes them to take on a red or pink color, hence the name pink eye is given the disease. The remedy is good care, keeping the animal in a semi-darkened, quiet shed stable, feeding on soft food, bran and boiled oats, with plenty of pure water to drink. Bathe the eyes with warm water and then with hot with salt, and to every pint of the water add two ounces of sweet spirits of nitre. Horses thus treated usually recover in about nine days at the most. There is no preventive. It is the result of unsanitary conditions."—Farmers Advocate.

Rye as a Feed For Hogs.

Professor Smith, the Nebraska authority on live stock feeding, says: "I have had experience in feeding rye to fattening hogs. Rye alone makes a fairly good fattening ration, though it is less satisfactory than either corn or wheat. In tests made at the Nebraska station we have found that rye has a feeding value very nearly 10 per cent below wheat and practically the same per cent below corn. In composition it is much like wheat, but rye does not seem to be nearly as well relished; at least hogs will not eat as much rye as wheat or full feed. A mixture of equal parts of corn and rye makes a much more satisfactory fattening ration than rye alone, and equal parts of corn, rye and shorts are still better."

Improving Dairy Herds.

Many farmers will keep a cow a whole year to raise a twenty dollar calf, but the dairyman should not be satisfied with such a small profit. To make a dairy herd it is essential to select cows from them with care and judgment. Then test the offspring to see if the good qualities of the parent have been transmitted or if any improvement has been made. After one fair selection good feeding and care are of the highest importance. If we expect to retain and improve the good qualities.

"Ready For Worms in Horses.

Mix together one pound each of sugar and salt; in this one-half pound of fine smoking tobacco, six ounces of powdered wormseed and four ounces of powdered sulphate of iron. As a dose for a mature horse give a heaping tablespoonful in a wheat bran mash every morning for two weeks; cut a smaller dose in proportion to size and age.—Farmers Advocate.

Owl Caused Conflagration.

An owl flew out of a burning elevator at Cowcash, Cornwall, England, with its feathers on fire, and perched on a haystack near at hand. The result was that the hay was completely destroyed, and several stacks of straw barely escaped.

The SPORTING WORLD

En Sue, Chinese Ball Player.

Chinese, in this country have not yet taken up the great American national game of baseball, but there is a pressing in Hawaii who threatens to break into the doings in this country very soon. This Chinaman is Ed Sue, one of the greatest athletes of the present age. He has a record of 9 2-5 seconds for the fifty yard dash and is expected to be able to run 100 yards in 9 4-5 seconds. At present he is playing third base for a team in Honolulu and his work in the field, with the bat and on the bases is said to be marvelous. He has played against several American ball teams, and his batting is very highly spoken of. In another year some enterprising manager in the United States will probably import him.

Taft Says Jap Can Defeat Gotch.

Had you the chance, asks the Japanese wrestler who recently visited the White House, can defeat Frank Gotch, said President of War Taft yesterday. "Anyway, I don't think Gotch has a right to consider himself the champion of the job until he has made my old friend Hitakatsu cry 'Enough.' I don't know whether it would be possible for the two men to agree on terms" said the secretary. "Wrestling in Japan is a very different matter from wrestling in America. Instead of being roped in on a mat, as they are here, the Japanese wrestlers struggle not only to throw each other, but to hold each other outside the marked area. When a contestant steps over the line with both feet he loses the bout, just as he would if he had been thrown on both shoulders."

Vigilant to Race Again.

The old America's cup defender Vigilant will be put in commission this summer and raced by C. Oliver Iselin. The famous yacht is now laid up in a shed and lay on the beach of Gardiner's Bay, at Greenport, N. Y., but work of uncovering her and fitting her out will be begun shortly. She will be taken overboard the middle of May. Mr. Iselin bought the Vigilant last summer, but did not race. The Iselin crew is thoroughly and therefore much heavier than she was when she defeated Lord Dunraven's Valkyrie II. off Sandy Hook in 1893, but she is still fast and probably will be queen of the coast this summer in windward work. Though not quite as fast a yacht, she is inline a large mainsail and has little less power than a sloop of the same size.

Sayre Champion Revolver Shot.

Lieutenant H. H. Sayre of New York won the revolver championship at the recent indoor tournament of the United States Revolver Association, conducted simultaneously in fourteen cities. Sayre won a record twenty by Secretary J. R. Crabtree of New York. Sayre's score was 451 out of a possible 480. E. M. Fulcomer, N. J., was second, with 439 and W. G. Krieg of New York third, with 435. Sayre also won the New York honors in the state championship division.

Schoenlein Champion Wrestler.

Gus Schoenlein, better known as "Americus," of Baltimore is now the champion light heavyweight amateur catch-as-catch-can wrestler of America. He won that title recently at Philadelphia when he won two straight falls from Fred Heell of Wilmington in a 4,000 people.

He Got the Money.

A young man, whose father had recently received his first remittances for money, recently telegraphed as follows: "Have died. Grandfather. Please send cash to defray funeral expenses."

Clear Musty Room.

When a room or cellar is perceptible to a musty place place some charcoal in a dish or basket on top of a little bag of saw or sawdust. This will purify the air and absorb the odors.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Queer Mrs. Kangaroo.

Mrs Kangaroo has a big pocket in which she carries her young ones. It is the easiest kind of a place for a little kangaroo, and sometimes your will find a whole family of brothers and sisters in the pouch at once.

However, this is not the only way Mrs. Kangaroo has of carrying her children. When hunters pursue her she puts all her babies into her pocket and runs for dear life, but if she feels that the money is gaining on her and that she is in danger of being captured she selects one little one after another with her forefeet and turns it out of the pocket to one side of her pathway as she runs on and there it lies. She takes care to do this only at times when the enemy is not in sight. In this way she is relieved of the weight of the youngsters, and she can run faster.

At the same time, says the Chicago News, her mother is not a selfish one. She throws her babies out in so careful a manner that it does not hurt them. They are not little creatures, and when they land in a brush heap they are none the worse for it. The farmer loses all sorts of the little kangaroos by this movement.

Character Guessing.

All the players sit around in a circle. The player who first thinks of an interesting character in one of Grimm's fairy tales or in "Alice in Wonderland" or any other book that is quite familiar to all the players sits on the floor within the circle and begins to describe the character he has selected, thinking it over carefully, and the first one who thinks he has guessed the character sits up and the leader has to answer questions to describe the character. If he has answered rightly and is correct in his description, the first player who sits up has to get on hands and knees and imitate the first player shows him out of the game. As soon as a third thinks he has guessed the character he sits on the floor and tells who he knows of the character, and so it goes on till all the children are sitting on the floor except the leader, who is still guessing, and they are all driven out of the game.

Menagerie-a-la Jolly Hope.

Seven or eight boys or five feet long and one or two feet across, open at both ends. Into a sitting partition in the center and place it, covered with a dark cloth, on a table in a room adjoining the one where the company is assembled. Admit a boy and girl to the room, which is dark, at a time. The keeper tells them what animal they wish to see. They are then placed at the opposite ends of the box and told to peer within; then the partition is suddenly drawn out, and they gaze at one another. They remain in the room till all have been admitted and looked in the same way.

Error in Grammar.

There has been a good deal of discussion now and then as to the phrase "grammatical error," but the best scholars hold that it is not good English. The adjective "grammatical" is active and not passive, or perhaps it might be better to say that it is both active and not objective, and it seems in accordance with the rules or principles of grammar. Therefore, therefore, is a grammatical error, for an error cannot be grammatical. The right expression is "an error in grammar."—Chicago News.

A Mighty Key.

One of the oldest and most curious examples of the locksmith's art is attached to the door of Temple church, a Lent street, London. The key weighs seven pounds, is eighteen inches long, and, little other boys, it was not made for the lock. On the contrary, the lock was made for it.

A Memory Test.

A memory test which will trip the mover consists in writing down the names of the books of the Bible in their proper order.

What most resembles half a cheese? The other half.

What part of London is in France? The letter "n."

A Riddle.

A child asked her father how old he was, and the father replied, "I am just six times as old as you are, but in twenty-four years you will be one-half as old as I." What were their ages?

Answer—He not thirty-six.

Lacks the Token.

Justice and Decency.

Justice consists in not injuring men, decency in not offending them.—Cicero.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

A Jolly Making Bee.

It is quite difficult to arrange the jolly ring when making jelly so that it is easily managed. A very good plan is to lash the edge of the ring over a large embroidery hoop, from a tape hung to the hoop for which to insert it when not in drain. With this arrangement the hot fruit may be poured without spilling and there is no danger of the bag slipping or bursting itself. A jelly bag should always be made with a point or angle at the bottom to ensure the maximum of pressure.

Waterproof Wall Covering.

The best way to make a tinted wall waterproof is to use mixed a stiring material that is natural cement with one gallon of it, one clean, cool sea pebble—glue size on the wall. After this initial cement is applied directly to the plaster, thoroughly cover it with water enamel, and then, after the water enamel has dried, size it a thorough coating with size good varnish. This will make a perfectly impervious wall which, like water of best will not affect.—Success

Freckle Lotion.

The following formula is a harmless and mild freckle lotion: Mix, thirty grains; potassium chlorate, two grains; alcohol, one half dram; glycerin, one dram; rosewater enough to make three ounces. Apply with a soft sponge several times a day. But remember one thing and that is that you must be careful and use the lotion with little care. Always use cold cream at night time.

Sewing Scissors.

By a recent invention of an Illinois man it is now possible for tailors, mackers and tailors to cut a piece of goods and leave it at the same time. This wonderful piece of mechanism is attached to an ordinary pair of shears in a very simple manner, forming a combined cutter and hooter. The new hooter can be operated by the thumb and of the shears, leaving the fingers free for other work. During the operation of cutting the shears move forward and the fabric the length of the hooter stitch dropping upon the front of the forward movement of the shears at each step of the cutting. The machine can continue of a needle and hooter, with a spool carrying the thread attached to the floater. As the hooter are closed the needle descends, and when the shears are opened the needle rises, a stitch being thus made. Continually the fabrics will be placed free to face, and as the shears are operated to cut the desired pattern the needle and the hooper baste the fabrics.

CUTS AND SEWS.

For Too Curly Hair.

Too curly hair, although the pret straight haired girls cannot imagine it, is distressing. If the hair is dry, this preparation will make it smooth and combable: Sometimes easier oil, two ounces; coconut oil, two ounces; oil of rosemary, one ounce; oil of jasmine, one-half dram. Slightly heat the oils to mix them. Pour into a bottle and shake for five minutes. This is the recipe of a famous beauty specialist.

Smothered Perch.

Clean and carefully dress as many large white perch as are needed. Put a thin slice of fat salt pork on each fish and cover with a thin layer of finely chopped onions. Arrange in baking pan that can be covered, put into the oven and bake slowly. Just before the fish are done season well with salt and pepper. Pour over the fish sou cream or milk with plenty of butter.

Ice Cream Without Cream.

Scald five teaspoonfuls of milk in five boiler and thicken with heaping tablespoonful of cornstarch, into which put a lump of butter the size of a walnut. Boil one cupful of milk and one cupful of sugar together and thicken with the yolks of two eggs. After the mixtures are cool mix, flavor and add the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs and freeze.

One Use for Least Pencils.

Some manufacturer is advertising lead pencils of 12 degrees of hardness. "Due for Every Purpose." Does this include the purpose of fishing through the cracks on the floor of a street car for the fare you dropped?

Difficult Breathing

Short breath, fluttering, palpitation, sinking spells are symptoms of a weak heart, struggling to do its work. It must keep the blood in circulation to carry nourishment to make flesh, bone and muscle, and remove the worn-out particles. When it cannot do this, it must have help. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure gives strength to the heart nerves and muscles, and increases the heart action.

"I am glad to say that I am so much improved in health by Dr. Miles' Heart Cure that I can do my work. My sisters failed I think the other medicine would do for me what Heart Cure has done. My eyes was bad, had an ill feeling in my head, was nervous, had no appetite, my heart kept me fast at times that I thought it was all over with me. I tell my friends that great medicine is responsible for the first thing I have had to do with since I lost my health." MRS. MARY C. HAYES, Ashland, Ashland Co., Mass.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure will do for your disease, we will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails he will refund your money.

The Trouble with Carr.

"I rather like the young fellow, Mrs. Pagin said, graciously, after Carr had gone home. "He is good looking and unassuming, but you don't call him a brilliant conversationalist. The Lowlies gave him a little of your kind of talk."

"Unfortunately," replied Mr. Pagin, "Carr cannot talk on a subject he does not know something about it."—Youth's Companion.

Pretty Cold.

"Mamma," said four-year-old Fred, as he came tumbling in the cold wintry day, "I carried my nurse cold winter like big 'f I'd a mind, and she said it was as useless as a mere."

Comparison for Misfortune.

Never repine at misfortune, or envy the happiness of another, when it is impossible for any man to form a right judgment of his neighbor's sufferings, for which reason determine never to think too highly of another's condition, but regard the sorrows of one's fellow creatures with sentiments of humanity and compassion.—Addison.

A Meaty Bit of Truth.

When a man in New York or elsewhere boasts that his home is in "southern gentlemen" he is a poor, lying fool. A gentleman from anywhere is a gentleman anywhere, and he does not need to proclaim the fact.

WIFE'S SLAYER GETS LIFE TERM

Louis Carmin of Springfield, Mo., is Stricken in Court.

Louis L. Carmin, an engineer, who went to Oakland, Cal., to attend the trial of Mack Williams, charged with the murder of Carmin's wife and child, died at the home of a friend on that city. Relatives in Springfield, Mo., have been notified and the body will be brought back for burial. Carmin's wife described him in Springfield also as a person very willing to do good for his staff fare member, who, a few years ago found him a bed-ridden on the premises occupied by Will Williams, a tenant farmer, and nursed the actual, conscious and life impression upon Williams, resulting from a dream of a woman who lived near the Williams home. In a vision the woman, in the pearl bells of Mrs. Carmin, was found passed as Williams' wife, hung in a French mode the house. Williams was convicted of the murder. The dream so proved upon her that she induced the Carmins to make an inquiry. The finding of Mrs. Carmin was found to have occurred in the house in the Carmin brought back which back from Oakland and Carmin was arrested and death closed twenty-four years after Williams' conviction.

PLOT TO SLAY MANUEL.

Civil Governor of Lisbon Orders Surrender of All Arms.

As a result of the political unrest of late in anticipation King Manuel of Portugal and investigations of conditions against the insurgents, the civil governor of Lisbon has issued orders for the surrender of the possession of private persons in any number of hundreds. After May 1 any person having arms in his possession will be severely punished. The government has finished its investigation of the plot that led to the assassination last February of King Carlos and the crown prince of Portugal, but it would appear that the conspiracy had so many ramifications and ties to other plots that it is not either suspected or suspicned that it has been completely nipped in the bud. Nevertheless, in order to keep up appearances, King Manuel, who is taken his oath of office will grant a general political amnesty. This, however, will only cover offences up to June 20. The attempts occurred Feb. 1.

COLOMBIA HAS GRIEVANCE

Says Panama Is Intriguing with Venezuela to Bring About War.

Colombia has cause to believe that the government of Panama is intriguing with Venezuela to bring about a war between the two. It is known that the occupation of Colombia, on the Atrato river, the boundary line between Panama and Colombia, has usurped the Panama government. The occupation of Arendis was opposed by the Colombian government, which held that it was clearly within Colombian territory. One of Secretary Taft's duties in Panama was to try to adjust the matter. It is believed that the American government is aware of the effort of Panama to induce Venezuela to make war on Colombia.

BLAST SINKS WARSHIP; 200 LIVES ARE LOST

Exploding Projectile Destroys Japanese Cruiser Matushima at Port Arthur.

BOATS SAVE OVER 100 OF CREW.

Sons of Baron Chinda and Prince Oyama, of the Cadets, Thought to Have Perished.

Two hundred or more Japanese naval officers and sailors met their death on Tuesday when the Japanese training cruiser Matushima was demolished by an explosion. The cruiser sank within a few minutes after the explosion occurred, but the crew of 300 succeeded in reaching the waters with it, despite frantic efforts of those in the cabins. Inshashima and Hashidate, also a boatload men were saved, all men of the officers, including the captain, are numbered among the dead. The tragedy was caused by a mysterious explosion in the cruiser's magazine.

The explosion came just as the captain was shouting orders to Makaroff, a gunner on the Pennsylvania cruiser. Many of the cadets and sailors were resting on the deck, watching or taking part in the evolutions, when the explosion came. The cruiser was swept into the wave by the upheaval and part of them saved.

Officers Sink with Ship.

The officers, however, were nearly all below on account of the early hour. Those who escaped from the cabins scramble for life and safety, but the cruiser sank so quickly that the men were thrown into such a panic by the explosion, and the ways of escape were so blocked by the living debris in the cabins, that they could reach the decks the very last and gone down.

A number were killed outright or injured in the disaster. Most, however, were drowned in the cabins after the cruiser had overturned in death throes. The quick sinking of the ship saved the helpless victims from the horror of death by burning.

Among the crowded families of Japan are represented among the victims. The sons of Baron Chinda, the minister of the foreign office, and of Prince Oyama, and a number of among the cadets who it was feared were lost, also Captains Nomo, Yoshimori and Yashiro.

The cruiser had a displacement of 4,278 tons, being about three feet longer than the same armament as the United States cruiser Olympia. It carried one twelve-inch and eleven inch guns. It was one of the older ships of the Japanese navy, having been built in 1890, at a cost of $1,000,000. The vessel was admiral Hoka's flagship at the battle of the Yalu River.

tended to his position often bore down hard upon the young man, and Saturday afternoon in talking with friends he said that he had so much work that he did not know what to do.

Saturday morning he went to Boyne City on business, but returned about noon. Immediately after dinner he went to his room and commenced the work of reading and correcting the examination papers. Later he came down stairs and expressed his intention of attending a party at the home of a friend that night. With the exception of his excuse to the amount of work attendant upon his position he appeared to be in his usual spirits. About 4 o'clock he returned to his room, and on a table in the room a neatly arranged pile of corrected examination papers showed that he had done considerable work just before killing himself. He left no note to explain the deed. The bullets were found an inch apart and both had entered the heart.

Committee on streets and sidewalks were instructed to bring in estimated cost of curb, gutter and paving of Mason street, and that three weeks hence, May 28th, be the evening to hear all objections to the same.

Written report of committee on fire and prevention, was accepted and adopted.

Special committee made a report as to Pleasant avenue Brookside cemetery, which report was accepted and adopted, and added report recommends that the street be not narrowed, as was intended by the cemetery board.

Matter as to water lines and N. L. Produce Co., was left to committee on water and electric lights, the committee to report at next meeting.

The petition of Frank Hayes was referred to committee on sidewalk and swing bridge.

Clerk was instructed to purchase necessary tags for dog tax.

An ordinance fixing the salaries of city officers was passed, which ordinance is published.

Mayor Rose made the following appointments, which were confirmed:

Chief of Police, George Hellstrom; Street Commissioner, Harrison Bergdan; City Attorney, A. L. Fitch; Harbor Master, Elmer Johnson; Dog Warden, George Cook; Health Officer, J. H. Thielen; Cemetery Board, Barney Hodge.

Special Police: James Gaskins, Henry Sherman, Capt. Herlan, Chas. Howard, W. H. Sider, Elmer Johnson, Karl Wurzburg.

The Mayor and aldermen by virtue of their office, being vested with the power of appointing police, the City Clerk was instructed to procure badges for mayor and aldermen.

The Charlevoix County Bank and Charlevoix State Savings Bank were both made depositories for city funds.

CHAPTER II.

Half after five, the chauffeur sat tranquilly on the front seat of the motor, smoking a cigarette—the smoker said, wondering, with increasing curiosity as the moments slipped by, when the rest of the party would respond. Two hours the party would remain in the direction of the cathedral, with the avowed intention of returning in time for the 7:30.

Alain had spoke the starting cyclamen flashed down the street, then, the cyclamen flashed down the street, then, the aquamarine. Seemed their concentrated state this space. It was not until a half hour had passed that Alain noted that three times came in sight, walking with the enhanced gait that smacks the entire civilization. On nearer view it became evident that one of them was in the best of spirits; Mrs. Waring, in particular, being quite evidently given the slip. Coupled with her of too much inevitable result with her of too much sight-seeing.

"Now for the tea basket," she announced peremptorily, on reaching the motor. "Where are the attendants? Alain, where is Jeffrey? Get it out, and let's all go in and have something to eat."

Her glance as well as the world's rested on the chauffeur, who after a moment's hesitancy at this unprecedented and alluring invitation, had turned down from his perch and seizing the hamper, followed his employer into the tea room.

There, while Annette Bancroft piled up the sandwiches, Jeffrey poured the chocolate, her friends chatted, in spite of all his determination, was beginning to chafe painfully.

"Yes, the car does travel most excellently," he heard, a little hoarsely, striving conscientiously to keep his head. "The tire are Jeffrey's. Nothing on to power right, over the brow of that hill, to pass the signal."

Mrs. Waring glanced upward. "Only a long walk, I think, darkness again and a storm," she announced drearily, as the motor sped on. "There—I'm tired of this—I'm getting this with a little shiver—I'm not positive I can walk, have inky black woods up there." Then, in a sudden change of mood, "Annette, you don't leave anything valuable on board?"

Her manner had lapsed in usual fitting matter-of-factness, and the chauffeur pulled himself sharply into order.

"Pause is pretty safe going," he reassured her, pleasantly. "I don't know if I have left anything afield! When the Prince de Polignac and I hunted through the woods years ago, after one of the usual outbreaks, we had back notes scored to the interfitting of our motor coats and carried loaded Winchesters."

"Very exciting!" Mrs. Waring glanced at him curiously. "Well, I've never had to go as far as that," she rattled on, "though I do take the precaution of hiding away my diamonds, wherever I go, in so inconspicuous chamois glove case at the bottom of a trunk."

She changed the subject hurriedly, "Hist, speaking of glove case!—there was a ring of interest in her tone—I saw by the Paris Herald that he's selling for America. He sell me something about the man, Sarto, one hears such fabulous accounts of his wealth, his good looks; you must have grown to know him very well during these two years."

Her manner was flatteringly confidential, but the chauffeur's eyes lowered imperceptibly.

"The other—oh, I know him well enough," he admitted, resenting this insinuation of prefer his good looks. "Rich his wealth, he has certainly enough—I don't know what he do with, but for his looks—" he shrugged his slight shoulders expressively. "Look at myself my own build, I suppose—tall, dark, clean shaven, a weak chin, like a sailor, and waves a muscle. That is about all there is to him."

Opening the hamper at this point, he broke off a conversation that had lost its interest, and turned his attention resolutely to the matter at it swept along the high road through the green jagged cliffs that cut the sky.

At the moment there was silence on the front seat, and from the tonneau emerged a murmur of appreciation. In the part of its two occupants, one of them in glowing wakefulness, another of his sex had before him, what woman sense to her incomprehensible when not exercised, and how much self respecting man's heart is never, should get to know.

The car sped on, through villages which seemed only an interval between drinking fountains and ever nearer to the sea.

It cannot be more than a mile from Have now," announced Sarto at length. "I'm tired of sitting, and need the smallest ingot in his robe did not escape the keen eyes of Mrs. Waring.

Turning her head, Mrs. Waring glanced at her companion with a smile. She was not in the least offended.

"Hair pin," he blurted out, with sudden savagery. "I was myself leaving you alone with—" He checked himself with effort a moment, compelling kicking the pebbles in his violently, and then, in a tone of injured gruff, "I'm tired, too, he concluded. "You've been jolly rotten awfully to me all day, Gussie, but this is the limit."

Mrs. Waring ignored the reproach in his tone; her's had suddenly become very friendly. "I don't know I was going to touch," she remarked. "Annette will have to be disappointed then. Of course she is under my charge, and I could—possibly sanction the temporary loss of her walking into Have at this hour of the night with my chauffeur."

Gussie had pulled the right side, as usual, and slowly and reluctantly the Englishman rose to his feet. To tell the truth, he was a little ashamed of himself for this time, having underrated the intelligence attitude of British creatures, an exceedingly kind heart.

"Of course I'm perfectly willing to take that walk," he announced somewhat stiffly. "If Miss Bancroft would really like to go and you prefer it."

"I wish it!" As if I wished it!" Gussie Waring raised her candid, childlike eyes to Gerald's face and dropped them again instantly.

Alain, in a very low voice, "I thought," she said, "we were only conducting Annette."

There is a peculiar potency in the first person plural of a strong pronoun when used in the right tone by the right woman.

A broad smile cleared the squalldrift from Gerald's open countenance, and, making up his mind suddenly, he crossed the road to a couple of sticks, approaching the girl, by the motor.

"Put the table up into liners for this thing, Miss Bancroft!" he suggested, with engaging promptness. "Let's have—I'm ready if you are."

"Of course I am, and—Annette." She glanced at Sarto's motionless figure by the motor and then at her watch. "Well, I'm sorry, Gussie. We'll bring the tea back then. Come on, Mr. Hale." And, with her accident quick enthusiasm, she led the way down the hill.

"We were in hurry back," Mrs. Waring called after them hesitatingly, for said Sarto aroused to finerfing that her shoulders shook mischievously as the two figures disappeared from view round the curve of the hill?

By the time he joined her, however, the mischievous expression on his face which effectually concealed some striking resemblance to the wisdom and conventionality of her course, the one person of the prospective intimate under the stars with an inflammable chauffeur was Mrs. Gussie rather enjoyed playing with fire. It is an amazing pastime (especially when it is from a safe distance.)

"Well," she laughed lightly, as her friends came in a standstill beside her. "What are you looking so serious about? I'm sure I have behaved rightly. I was thinking," he said, in an oddly constrained tone, "that at the rate they're walking we shall be gone any time."

The speech was inconsequential, but it was full of meaning, a subtle suggestion which Mrs. Waring, however, chose to ignore.

"I think that was an admirable arrangement of mine," she said, with a decisive side glance.

The chauffeur cleared over gently. "Admirable!" he responded, with quite unnecessary emphasis.

There was a long pause, during which the three crawled laboriously and a fine wind came in fitful gusts through the poplars. Gussie, with her hands clasped on her long down, looked into place with innumerable stars, and to right and left the wild fields of France lay spread, a gray expanse curving towards the horizon.

The setting was perfect for the romance, the moonlit silence, and Gussie felt that she was enjoying herself, something in her nature, possibly the tendency to the scene—the same (for the moment she had lost sight of the chauffeur).

A BILL IN CONGRESS.

The Method by Which a Measure Is Transformed Into Law.

In a day or two the consideration of the bill the house goes into committee of the whole. A chairman appointed by the speaker presides. The bill is read by sections and clauses after a general debate, is closed, and any member may offer amendments. All voting is supposed to be by rising. The ayes and nays are not taken.

When the bill has been gone through and amendments have been voted upon, the committee rises and the chairman reports the bill back to the house, with the amendments. The house then votes upon them either single or in gross and by yeas and nays if they are ordered to be taken.

The bill is then ordered to be engrossed—that is, written out in a fair hand and just as it is after being passed upon. It is then read a third time. This is done in the house by title, as a matter of form, and without debate. The house then votes upon the question, "Shall the bill pass?" This vote is taken by yeas and nays.

The bill is then ordered to be engrossed—that is, written out in a fair hand and just as it is after being passed upon. It is then read a third time. As it is usually already engrossed it is read by title and the third time—by title, as before—and passed.

The clerk takes the bill in the senate, which only it is referred to the committee of the whole, in the house, in committee. If it was H. R. 4444 or otherwise, requires the bill back to the senate, with proportions to suit, in the senate the bill is considered "as in committee of the whole," the amendments of the finance committee and other voluntary amendments are accepted or rejected, the question is taken on the bill is reported to the senate from the committee of the whole, and the vote is taken.

As the two houses are not agreed upon the bill, a committee of conference is appointed, consisting of one members of each branch of congress, is appointed. The committee, when it has come to an agreement, reports to each house, and the acceptance of the report is the final stage of the bill in its passage.

The house is now "enrolled"—that is, it is printed in large, open type upon a parchment—and is taken first to the senate, there it is signed by the Speaker; then to the Senate, where the Vice President signs it, and finally to the President, and makes the bill a law.

Congress is notified that the bill has been approved, and the original copy of the act is deposited in the department of State—Edwin Farrisin in Harper's Weekly.

An Artist's Home.

Le Rosson recently commissioned a great artist to paint his portrait, no difficulty prize being agreed upon. When the portrait was finished, the painter asked 100 crowns in payment. The highborn sitter, amazed at the demand, returned no more nor dared to send for his counterfeit presentment, whereupon the artist imposed upon the lazy equivalent of first painting bars across the portrait, then making the doleful legend, "Imprisoned for debt," and finally placing it in a prominent part of his studio, to which Roman nobles frequently resort. It was long a rich, relative cause to the rescue and released his kinsman.

The Popular Pulpit

THE RICHES WITHOUT COST.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Come buy wine and milk without price."—Is. lv. 1.

Did you ever stop to think that all the best things in life come without cost to ourselves? They are given freely. The things that are worth most are without money and beyond price also in the method of their acquisition. Has anything cost you more than your life? It is the measure that it has discovered and possesses those treasures.

A man may pay many thousands of dollars for the pleasure of a number, and yet it never will be nearly as beautiful as inspiring as valuable as the sunrise itself, a spectacle which the poorest may enjoy without the expenditure of a penny in money. All our works of art, costly as they may be, are but imitations of the originals which, while far exceeding them in beauty, may be seen for the taking.

The best pleasures of life are not to be bought. Amusements is for sale; but joy comes without cost to the true worshipping. There are no figures set upon happiness; it is above the "sell" of politics. It is deeper than the "seed of wit" and of science and of mechanism. They are always here, for God invented them; he is their discoverer.

It is said that man never progresses by trying to invent real truth. When he seeks to invent it he fails. He can come unbought, unsolicited, unbought. When wealth has ever sought for it, it has gone from him, the tender kindness, the so-apathy, the spirit of self-giving that alone can find it. The great discoveries are not on our office ledgers, but on the great hearts of men. The things which our final balances are arrived, they are with large.

When we make up the inventory of our lives, if our hearts have any recollection of true values we will have learned to distinguish between life's trade and its product, we will find that the things we have gained are those that have come upon us without our cost, the things which we have always beyond our powers to purchase.

How foolish then are we, who have the greatest, the enduring treasures by simply taking them! We waste our powers and our time in striving after the things that are not worth striving for, and we at least two ways of living—one is to try to make enough money to be able to buy happiness or affection or whatever you may want, the other is to keep the little desire, the soul of the joy and love and everything that is sinless.

Which is the wise? Which is the fool? We alone, with the enquiry of our greed, make it easy to be wise and difficult to be foolish. We are allowed to bidding all its beauty, and the open eye and appreciative heart, with without cost, for the asking. Yet we are so blind, so deaf, so dull, so selfish, so unsympathetic. The power that brings us from a mother's love, the sympathy of a friend, the light in our eyes, the joys of home and heaven are all free to us, if we will. Yet we are so blind, so deaf, so dull, so selfish, so unsympathetic.

What would we think of a man who inclined an orchard for the sake of the sell, or the grass or the fodder, and yet he never will pick the fruit? Some foolish who seem to live only for the income of their fortune, and who never enjoy the beauty of the fruit, or the flowers which the income buys, or the fruit which the income buys, or the flowers which the income buys, or the fruit which the income buys, or the flowers which the income buys, or the fruit which the income buys

PAST AND PRESENT.

A Founder of the Grange Writes About its Early Struggles.

I have frequently been asked if our Order is up to the standard it was contemplated by the early workers in establishing it. When we take into consideration that forty-two years have passed, over a generation, during which time the greatest progress in education and invention ever chronicled mankind has been legend-ridden, and a reaction followed. Today the sons and daughters of many of the ancient members are now leaders in the work. In the meantime no end of similar societies have been introduced, lived a short time and disappeared. "Co-operation" has been the great hobby. To a certain extent it works fairly well, but it has its limits. We saw a grand failure in this line in the Farmers' Alliance, and many of our members went to pieces. A good illustration of "co-operation" let them sip a little book for a dime entitled "The Great American Humbug" and have a good hearty laugh.

The principles, educational and social and strictly fraternal, have not changed, but the systematic rules that now govern in the organization of subordinate granges insure a permanency that was lacking in the early days. The great improvement in schools in the rural districts and the grand advantages of the agricultural colleges are making their influence felt. Rural mail routes, thousands of best telephone lines and facilities of reaching towns are placing the farmers of today far in advance of those of forty years ago. Another grand institution in which we are all actively interested is the department of agriculture. In 1862, soon after its origin and under the management of Isaac Newton, its facilities was in the basement of the patent office building. It was a standing joke for congressmen and a sort of Bonny Boy for disappointed office seekers. Today, under the remarkable management of Secretary Wilson, it is with its many branches, the largest department of our government. The secretary can well say he has built his own monument. In every state we see its benefits in the experimental stations, and we all appreciate the bulletins that are issued so gratuitously. We may well say the department is yet and proof of the wisdom of Patrons of Husbandry. Both have grown up together, and both are working for the direct benefit of the farmer.

O. H. KELLEY.

No Adjournment For Summer

It is the custom in some granges to close their doors for the summer season, believing that the attendance will be light and there will be little interest taken. Such granges should read carefully the by-laws of subordinate granges in which there is no provision for taking a vacation during the summer months. The grangers should hold a meeting once a month at least, and this includes the summer as well as the winter months. So there is no authority for taking a vacation by vote or otherwise. While no grange will leave its charter revoked on this account, yet the reputation would seem to be wise. Closing the doors through the summer months causes the members to lose interest, and it takes two or three meetings in September to get the grange back to where it was before the vacation in regard to attendance and general interest in the programme. Keep the grange open.

Direct Legislation in Oregon.

Under the system of direct legislation prevailing in our state the grange finds an excellent opportunity to make itself helpful in a practical way to the people of the state. Intelligently directed organized effort is necessary in order to make this system effective and report its operation along will defined lines toward the accomplishment of permanent and really essential reforms. The grange can serve no more useful purpose to the state than by educating the people, whose will under the system is the predominating influence in our political life, to an intelligent understanding and appreciation of their real needs.—State Master Buxton.

May Be Candidate For Governor.

It is very probable that Past State Master Gardner of Maine will be nominated for governor on the Democratic ticket this fall. Mr. Gardner is reported as saying: "A nomination for governor by Maine Democrats would be a most distinguished honor that I should certainly prize. In this connection I wish to say that I have not made nor shall make any effort to obtain the nomination. If it comes to me, why, I shall feel all the more highly pleased and shall do my best to be worthy of the honor as a candidate and if elected as chief executive of the state."

An Indian Legend.

The Indians say that elephants are the remains of the "Fathers of Oxen," who lived long ago when men were giants and the Great Spirit, Kitchi-Manitou, all with his thunder bolts.

No Show for It.

"They say Esperanto has so many synonyms and so many words which end alike that anybody will be able to write poetry in it."

"Well, then, I guess that settles Esperanto."

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

The National Grange Takes a Position on College Spots.

The committee on agriculture of the last national grange meeting incorporated in its report the following minute on certain points at agricultural colleges, and it, together with the report, was adopted. The committee said:

"We regret to note the tendency in our agricultural colleges to increase the amount of time spent in intercollegiate football and baseball and the apparent increased importance given to these sports. We believe that at no distant day all of our educational institutions will take a different stand on this subject from what they now do. We wish to go on record as being opposed to intercollegiate football in our agricultural colleges, especially when it interferes with the work in the agricultural and mechanical departments of these institutions. And we then oppose the hiring of men either directly or indirectly for athletic scholarships that has been appropriated by state or nation to these institutions. History teaches us that where agriculture is neglected that nation has prospered. It also teaches that where sports and amusements have flourished and crowded out honest labor that nation has decayed. Can the colleges hope to escape the doom of these nations?"

WILD BIRD PROTECTION.

The National Grange Believes in Protecting Our Feathered Friends.

The following resolution was handed in to the national grange at its Hartford session from the Connecticut state grange, and it was approved by the summer body:

Whereas, It is conclusive above that the wholesale and unnecessary killing of wild birds throughout the United States is a positive and dangerous menace to agriculture through depriving the farmer of the aid of the creatures that would otherwise destroy harmful insects and the seeds of noxious weeds, and superfluity and extravagant demand for feathers for the hats of our women, many and scientific grangers throughout the country thus make this matter an important department of their general work and in every way strive to create a sentiment of kindness and enforce legislation in behalf of the protection of the feathered friends of the farmer, as necessary to the welfare and such an attraction to country life at large.

Coming Field Meetings.

The season for field meetings is approaching, and much effective work can be done for the building up of granges throughout the state at these public gatherings. We believe that the addresses on these occasions should not be of too general a nature. They are for the benefit of the grange, and speakers should talk grange. They may recite what the grange has accomplished and make a strong appeal at every such meeting for the farmers to become members of the only farmers' organization that is worth while. Let there be plenty of music and make much of the social features after the speaking is over and before. Do not expect audiences to stand for hours and listen to addresses, but rather see that some social hours are provided. Convenience has much to do with the size of the audience sometimes.

An Easy Exchange.

The lecturers of New York state grange and Michigan state grange have recently instituted what is termed an essay exchange. It is for the purpose of assisting subordinate granges better, and others, lows are prepared by competent writers upon various grange topics, and these essays are at the command of the subordinate lecturers for their local grange work. Mrs. F. D. Saunders of Rockford, Mich., and S. J. Lowell of Fredonia, N. Y., will doubtless be glad to furnish further information to any one who may desire it concerning this essay bureau.

Its Fortieth Anniversary.

Old Pocomoke, No. 1, of New York state recently celebrated its fortieth anniversary. The number signified it was the first grange ever organized. The anniversary was one of the big events in grange circles. National Master Ingersoll, State Master Gifford and Past National Lecturer Mortimer Whitehead were among the chief speakers.

MICHIGAN GRANGE WORK.

A Splendid Organization Accomplishing Notable Results.

Michigan takes pride in its grand grange organization. Not only does this pride exist because it is the most ordinate and its 100 Pomona granges, but more especially because of its progressive and commendable work being done. Our granges are quite generally incorporated under the laws of the state as business bodies and can thus legally own real estate, such as building lots and grange halls, and can conduct various lines of pecuniary business.

The grange organization in Michigan is progressive and strong, popular with farmers and a recognized leader in the advocacy of practical education, social improvement, financial equity and as well a potent creator of commanding public sentiment for or against public questions as they would seem to affect the public welfare. Our granges, as a rule, hold meetings every two weeks, and ritualistic forms are so rendered as to make their beautiful lessons understood and appreciated.

We have in successful operation at the present time about twenty-five county and district and one state fire insurance companies. In this connection it may be of interest to state that in Michigan our chief competition in business is not with stock companies, but based with well-organized mutual companies, which had driven stock companies away from farm property before the grange companies were organized. The competition between the grange and the farmers' mutual companies have been keen and has demonstrated that because of superior advantages offered through local granges to the insurer in personal and practical access the grange companies have proved their superiority. While the farmers' mutual companies average a cost rate of about $2.50 per annum for every $1,000 insured, the grange companies will not average over $1.50 per thousand. The state county company of Lonawee, having an existence of twelve years, has carried the risks of its members at an average of $1.20 per thousand.—State Master Horton.

NEW YORK GRANGES.

Last Year's Record Is Likely to Be Broken in 1908.

On Oct. 1, 1907, the membership of the New York state grange was by round numbers 72,000 in 950 subordinate granges, having added forty-six new granges during the fiscal year. The amount of money in the treasury on Jan. 1, 1908, was $20,565.00. It paid into the national grange treasury $6,000.75 for dues. There were forty-five Pomona granges, also lively, been organized during the year. There were seven juvenile groups in the state. On Jan. 1, 1908, the total number of groups in the state was 63, and fifty-two counties in the state had grange organizations. In the 63 granges there are 72,355 members. There has been a very considerable gain in members since Jan. 1, 1908.

Fire insurance is a strong factor in helping to maintain the organization and has proved itself to be of immense value to the members in providing a safe and reliable insurance on their real and personal property. The Patrons' Fire Insurance association in this state represent nearly $100,000,000 of risks, and, while in the co-operative associations together representing about $270,000,000, with average cost per $1,000 for the year 1907 of $2.67, the average cost for strictly grange associations was only $1.96, thus proving the value of grange associations.

Doing Chores.

To dig one's own potatoes, to shock one's own corn, to pick one's own apples, to pile one's own quinches at one's own leisure! It is like filling one's system with an antidote before going into a fever-plagued country. One is immune to winter after this, provided he stays to bake his apples in his own wood fire. One works himself into a glow with all his digging, and picking and piling that lasts until warm weather comes again, and along with this harvest glow comes stealing over him the afterharvest peace. It is the serenity of Indian summer, the mood of the afterharvest moon upon him—upon him and his fields and woods.—Dallas Lore Sharp, in Atlantic.

Letter Writing.

Writing interesting letters doesn't come natural to me, and there are a good many people with whom I must keep in touch through letters, and I do not get a hint from them that anybody loses by it. So I have got into the way of keeping a notebook and jotting down in it brief notes to remind me as little pieces of news that will specially interest my different correspondents. I even jot down a little joke sometimes, says Home Club. Then, when spare time comes to write my letters my notes are ready to hand, and the interesting scraps of news don't go flying away directly I get my pen to paper, as they used to do. Everybody tells me my letters are much more interesting than they used to be. It is so, that is the secret.

Easy to Sunstroke Raw Egg.

Raw eggs are bloodshakers and may be taken in any way you please. The simplest method of getting them down is to take a shallow glass and put about four drops of lemon extract, to make the egg slide down easily with no gurgling. This is readily accomplished if the lemon be dropped on the contents of the glass tossed into the back of the mouth. Raw eggs are some too much when one is trying to recuperate.

SOME GRANGE HISTORY.

Men Who Founded the Order Just After the Civil War.

About forty-two years ago in the city of Washington a few men put their heads together to see if something could be done for the farmers of the southern states, who were unfortunate enough to possess, because of the civil war, I believe that the coming together of these men and what resulted from their friendly conclusions were momentous in its results in the interests of the farmers of America and even the world. I believe that their names will live when the names of many now of fame will be forgotten. Let me name them here. They were H. H. Kelley, John Trimble, F. M. McDowell, J. R. Thompson, A. B. Grow, William Saunders and W. M. Ireland.

What was it that these men did that, as it seems to me, was of such consequence and importance? They organized and put into sound working condition the Order of Patrons of Husbandry, commonly known as the grange. So far as I know it was the first organization of rural farmers in their own interest in the history of the world. The fact best stated, if it be a fact, is in itself of profound significance. Through the ages men and women, few have toiled upon the land, but through the ages it was not until the last half of the nineteenth century that conditions were so that these toilers could get together and consider why and how and for whom they toiled and whereby their toil could be a better, a brighter, a nobler thing for them, and not for their only, but for all. The time was not ripe, and so this idea has been appreciated, but it will come.

Once fairly started, the order spread with astonishing rapidity until it overspread the country. It is important this in the finish of this unexpected success, these farmers would go no further than too far and that reaction would come. Certainly not. It could hardly be with a force, the reaction came, and with it for a time discouragement and obloquy, just as it be noted that before this decline in numbers and influence the Order had done something to make benefit not only to farmers, but to the country at large, that if it had done nothing else its existence would have been more than justified.

But, though decline and depreciation came to the grange, death came not. Its sickness was not mortal. In fact the sickness only proved the vitality and strong constitution of the patient. This, too, is significant. If the time had not at last come when farmers could see the wisdom of working together they would have gone down to the no more. Since then the steady, healthful growth of the Order and its work and achievement in the interest of the farmers is a thrilling story. Its membership is great and constantly increasing.—Michigan Grange Bulletin.

into a general banking room, cashier's room and lobby. The vault is one of the most secure that can be built. It has a spherical safe with triple time locks. The bank has 100 stockholders and while it was instituted by the grange, it does a general banking business.

Grange Scholarships at Cornell.

The New York state grange has for never its offer of scholarship to members of the grange at the above named institution, qualifications for which are to be held the third Saturday in June in each county. The value of the six scholarships for the winter short course is $50, or $25 for each, and they are to be awarded to the six contestants who attain the highest standing in the examination. The examinations are open to both men and women who are members of the order, but the student must be seventeen years of age on entering college. The examinations are based on general knowledge, arithmetic, history, civics, English, spelling and agriculture. Those who desire to take these examinations should notify their Pomona master or the county deputy at least three weeks before the examination.

Grange Growth.

During the quarter ending April 1 there were 116 new granges organized and thirty reorganized in the United States. New York is credited with 33 new granges, Washington, Vermont 15, Pennsylvania 12, Ohio 9, these being the largest. Connecticut reports the largest number of reinstated granges—namely, 8—West Virginia 7 and Pennsylvania 5.

PROTECTS MOTHER; SHOOTS SIRE

Boy at Niagara Falls Takes Drastic Measures to Stop Abuse.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., special: Jealous because his mother was being abused by his father, Frank Fuller, 14 years old, shot and killed his father here Sunday morning. Young Fuller had been drinking and had quarreled with his mother. When he left on Wednesday morning he said to his mother: "If father comes home and begins abusing you as he usually does, I'll shoot him." He left home and got the revolver he had purchased months ago and when his father came home he used it with his wife. The lad emptied the revolver into his father's body, shot twice while and the last penetrated the mother and the bullets lodged in the outer house.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The Central Lake Torch has been sold to R. F. Bishop from Ohio.

The Northern Michigan Bee Keepers' association held its annual meeting at Mancelona last week. The association has a membership of 150, and last year produced 400,000 pounds of honey.

The proposition to bond Boyne City for $20,000 was carried at the special election Monday. The money is to be expended in improving the sewer system and the streets. It is likely the fire department will be equipped with modern apparatus.

Caught by flames in the lower part of the house Wednesday night, Frank Mitchell, of North Boyne, saved the lives of his wife and children by throwing them out of a second story window, then jumping out himself. Mrs. Mitchell's dress caught fire, and she was severely burned, but the other members of the family escaped serious injury. The house and contents, valued at $2,000, partly insured, were destroyed.

East Jordan Herald: Ira D. Bartlett left Wednesday for Grand Rapids. From there he goes to a little place south of that city and purchases a carload of honey bees, returning with them to East Jordan first of the week. He has the ground already staked out and will place the colony on the farm of Martin Bartlettmeier. Mr. Bartlett is a thorough student of beeculture and knows how to make the industry pay.

By a special act of the legislature Gaylord is permitted to enact a 12 cents fee of $500 from the saloons, in addition to the state license. This year the saloons refuse, upon advice of counsel, to pay it on the ground that the ordinance is void because it imposes a penalty not provided for in the act itself. A legal fight will now be the next thing and meanwhile a very strong sentiment against the saloon keepers is growing in Gaylord.

The Rev. A. D. Grigsby was formally installed as pastor of the Presbyterian church at East Jordan last week Monday. The following ministers took part: Rev. W. Sidebotham, moderator of Presbytery, presiding, asking the constitutional questions and charging the pastor, Rev. G. J. Ries of Boyne City preaching the sermon, Rev. W. Aull of Petoskey delivering the charge to the people, also Rev. J. Young of Elmira who read the lesson, Rev. J. Halpath offering installing prayer.

After reading about the west arm of the bay freezing over, a friend of the Record, who lives in Six Rapids, slides the following bit of faith: "The several mornings past a tantalizing appearance has greeted early risers along the shore as they have looked out upon this same sheet of glass: ice on East Bay. A boat load of the choicest Mackinaw trout have been seen scattered about, lying here and there upon the frozen surface. With the rising sun, the ice melts and the fish are restored to the water. As none of them ever float ashore, it is evident the trout are none the worse for their airing. An old fisherman who has lived for years upon the bay says the trout leap at the marks and noticed fluttering over the water without seeing the ice-sheet. The fish rise with such momentum as to leave a clean, round hole through the ice, lasting back upon its surface, where they must be until the sun or morning breezes break up the feast. The gulls get used to the presence of the fish, which soon be motionless upon the surface, and make no attempt to eat them. Many trout would be taken in this way but that the ice is too thin to carry a man while too thick to permit a boat to go out to pick them up."

Dear Sir: If it took 10 gallons to paint your house last time with somebody else's paint, and takes 8 with Devoe, we save you $8 or $10 for painting costs two or three times as much as paint.

Mr. Rex Hathwell, Williamsport, Pa., always used 11 gallons of mixed paint for his house. Devoe took 6.

But that isn't all; that's only first cost; how long will it wear?

The paint, that goes furthest in covering, wears best too.

Make Over Old Firearms.

A large business is making over old firearms in Belgium. At Liege 4,000 guns, sabres, worthless pistols, are cut into "antiquities." They transform modern rifles into flintlocks.

Future for Rutile Metal.

Rutile is defined as the parent ore of all the metal titanium. They thinks that this metal is going to be in great demand for the bearings and axles of flying machines. A big deposit of rutile has been found in the Tinaroo district of Queensland.

—Mrs. A. B. Dahlmer of Dunkirk, N. Y., who has been here the past two weeks, returned home Monday.

—W. J. Bachow returned from Toronto last Thursday, leaving Mrs. Bachow there with relatives for a few weeks.

—The U. S. survey steamer Col. L. C. Lusk, (formerly the Gen. Williams) came here Saturday after coal, and remained over Sunday.

—Married, at St. Marys Catholic church, Monday, May 25th, by the pastor, Mr. Peter Loulmer to Miss Maggie Dougherty, both of Charlevoix.

—Will Cartier, of Nome, Alaska, who has been here the past week visiting his brother, E. E. Cartier, left for home Friday. Mr. Cartier is engaged in mining.

—The goods in the office building on Bridge street is about completed, and general manager Nordrum expects to move in the last of the first of next week.

—The SENTINEL job office receives job stock by about every boat. We claim to have the best equipped job printing office in Charlevoix county and can prove it by the quality of our work.

—Capt. Darden, local inspector of hulls, being quite ill at his home in Grand Haven, the Detroit inspectors have been doing the inspection work in this part of the district the past two weeks.

—The steamer Lena Knoblock, the new boat for the East Jordan route, arrived here Thursday night. Capt. Chas. Dunn began work building an enlargement of the cabin, repainting, etc., and expects to have her running by June 15th.

—The big concrete cone of the new city works well will be down to the required depth this week, and connection with the system will be next week. This in addition to the old well and filter gallery, will furnish an abundance of absolutely pure water for an indefinite period.

—The Salvation Army will conduct special revival meetings, commencing Saturday evening, May 30, and all day Sunday, beginning at 10:30 a. m., 3 and 8 p. m., continuing the following week. The meetings will be conducted by Ensign Gilbert, on the Ohio and Kentucky province. The Ensign has had a wide and varied experience as a Salvation Army lady officer and as a speaker and good musician. Don't fail to hear him.

—Mrs. E. H. Green, who has been several weeks in Chicago with her daughter, is home again.

—Mrs. O. A. Sears, who spent the winter at Winter Park, Fla., is at her Park avenue home for the summer.

—F. M. Sears has recently been making some very marked changes and improvements in his Dixon avenue home.

—Petoskey has abandoned the sea serpent resort argument, and is now telling about ten pound rainbow trout being caught at the mouth of Bear Creek.

—Inspector Vutheis, of the U. S. harbor improvement work here, went to Petoskey Monday to measure a load of stone for the breakwater there.

—Allie Moore, "the Charlevoix Boy," who has been in some exciting roller skating contest in Chicago lately, is in town. He has signed a very profitable contract to skate at Coney Island this summer, and several races are booked for him there. He will leave for the East June 1st.

—U. S. district attorney Cavell thinks he has made a ten strike in his case for the republican nomination for congress in the eleventh district by enlisting the active support of Mayor Francis Kieg of Alma. The Alma man is said to be very influential in the district and he is outspoken in his support of the Traverse City candidate.

—Speaking of the recent death of McDonald and Johnson, the Cheboygan Tribune says: "Only a short time ago the Kennedy Bros. and another fisherman were near death's door by the gas coming from the engine and being housed in the cabin too long a time without opening any doors, and when they arrived here were deathly sick and barely able to crawl from the boat. They did not tell one another of being sick. They never want to experience the same again."

—Again we call attention to a custom that should be corrected. We refer to the habit of always driving in the middle of the macadamized street. If people would always take the right hand side of the street, it will not only obviate the necessity of turning out, but it relieves the center of the wear and tear that comes with the existing habit. Further, the sides have a better water shed than the center, and will dispose of the rainfall more readily than the center, along which, after a rain, there is now a line of most that defaces the street. Keep the right hand side of the street with your buggy or auto.

—The following from the Traverse City Record applies with equal force to Charlevoix: "Traverse City has an ordinance prohibiting spitting on the sidewalk but it is not enforced as most any of the walks will bear testimony. A man guilty of expectorating in a public place is not only making a nuisance of himself and adding to the discomfort of those who use the streets and walks but is aiding in the spread of disease. Sputum or spit contains germs if the spitter is in an unhealthy condition and through this same saliva, the great white plague has its most fertile source of transmission. The saliva may dry but the germs remain in the dust alive and ready to create havoc. A woman waking along the street, may pick up millions of these germs on her dress and carry them to her home, there to breath them in and she and her family contract diseases of various kinds. The unsightly puddles of spit on the streets are not only unsightly but are dangerous and should not be tolerated. The spitters should be made to step to the curb and expectorate in the street or else be arrested and if they don't reform, imprisoned."

Petoskey Record: Representative Loud succeeded in having passed through the house, last week, an appropriation of $7,500 to purchase a site for a government postoffice and office building in Petoskey. The action of the house in failing to have a government postoffice building, which will cost doubtless not less than $75,000, because when a government building has passed the house, it is precedent to pass the senate also, and the first appropriation is somewhere about two years hence, and the estimated final cost which this committee thinks proper.

HOOT MON!

A Scotchman Honored by His Admiring Friends and Countrymen.

Andrew Ross, the Charlevoix Lumber Co.'s superintendent, is a Scotchman "by the manner born." He is proud of his Highland blood and his Highland accomplishments. He can dance a highland fling or fiddle for another to do that same. He is never so happy as when he can tell you of the silent language of the Ross tartan or recite the heroic deeds of the Ross clan when Robert the Bruce ruled the Scots and a bunch of the Ross outfit were hanged while the MacDougals danced over the Claymores to the music of the pipes. This is our recollection of Scotch history, but we may be off on the names.

Well, Andy was honored yesterday as few Scots are honored. A select committee of Scotchmen, headed by Archie McNeill, waited on him at the mill, and after the ceremonies of the occasion adjourned to—the lake, and that reminds us of the McNeills. It is well known to students of Scottish history that there is a "bar sinister" on the McNeill escutcheon. Away back in the days preceding the battle of Bannockburn, when Macbeth was Thane of Cawdor and Glamis, and Douglas ruled the Scots, a McNeill was begged for horse-stealing, since which time no McNeill has ever looked a horse in the face. This is a historic fact.

Well, to return to the more immediate details of the present incident. The committee, headed by McNeill, presented Ross with a violin. The instrument was lately discovered accidentally in a garret. It is of most ancient make and bears the marks of unquestionable antiquity. Inside the shell, which is slightly broken, can plainly be seen the inscription "Cremona Stradivarius." The sweet, resonant tone of the instrument bears out the claim of age. The bow, which, from appearances, came down the ages hand in hand with the instrument, rests in the equally antique case.

In a few well chosen words McNeill presented the instrument to Ross, and Ross responded feelingly, acknowledging in his own quaint Scotch way the compliment which the gift conveyed. There was nothing said on either side about incidents in the history of the Ross or McNeill clans.

Ross plays the fiddle with an expression that always entrances his listeners. It is always a blend of the bagpipes and a yellow dog, with a piccolo shading that carries you back into the dim past when the Ross and McNeill clans were fighting about among the hills of bonnie Scotland trying to escape the halter.

BRING BACK SCALPS.

The Athletic Warriors of the Charlevoix High School Win at the Petoskey Track Meet.

The Charlevoix High School track team met Petoskey in a tourney in the latter city last Saturday, and came home blushing with honors. It was a dual contest between the two high schools, and those who were present as witnesses of the contests say the Charlevoix boys covered themselves with athletic renown.

The boys won by 10 points, Levinson winning five events. The Charlevoix team took first in the following events: High hurdles, broad jump, 440 yard dash, discus throw, 100 yard dash, low hurdles, and 220 yard dash. The count of points footed 54½ for Charlevoix to 44½ for Petoskey.

In the ball game between the Charlevoix high school team and the Petoskey city team, Petoskey won in a seven innings game, 10 to 2.

INSOMNIA CURE?

Trial of the "Cure" and Its Beneficial Effect Upon One Man.

A friend who heard that I sometimes suffer from insomnia told me of a sure cure. Said he: "Eat a pint of peanuts and drink two or three glasses of milk before going to bed, and I'll warrant you'll be asleep within an hour."

I did as suggested, and now for the benefit of others who may be afflicted with insomnia, I feel it to be my duty to report what happened as far as I'm able to recall the details.

First, let me say, my friend was right. I did go to sleep very soon after my retirement. Then a friend with his head under his arm came along and asked me if I wanted to buy his feet.

I was negotiating with him, when the dragon on which I was riding slipped out of his skin and left me floating in mid air. While I was considering how I should get down, a bull with two heads peered over the edge of the wall, and said he would haul me up if I would first climb up and rig a windlass for him. So as I was sliding down the mountain side, the brakeman came in and I asked him when the train would reach my station. "We passed your station four hundred years ago," he said, calmly folding up the train and slipping it into his vest pocket.

At this juncture the clown bounded into the center of the ring and pulled the center pole out of the ground, lifting the tent and all the people in it up, up, while I stood on the earth below watching myself go out of sight among the clouds above.

The 1 whole and then that I had been asleep almost ten minutes.

Old Settler's Meeting.

The old settlers' meeting will be held at Sutton's Bay on Wednesday, June 10.

The Steamer Cummings will run excursion, leaving Boyne City at 7 a. m., Charlevoix 8:30 a. m., connecting at Charlevoix with Steamer Hiawatha from East Jordan. Arrive Sutton's Bay at noon. Fare for round trip, $1.50.

Petoskey Record: A meeting of the board of control of the Beulah Land Farm for Boys was held on Saturday last at the office of President W. H. White. The board expressed their satisfaction at the way the home was being conducted and regard such as one of the best things about our city. A vote of confidence was extended Manager Swift and much literature was handed to those present.

—Traverse City Record: The peninsula is all in bloom now and judging by indications, the fruit crop this year, especially cherries and small fruits, will be a heavy one, the trees escaping hurt despite the 11 blizzards of last winter. The outlook for late apples, however, is not so encouraging, and it is believed that crop this year will not be so heavy, particularly as the trees bore very heavily last year. A letter received from Mr. Pippin who bought apples on the peninsula last year, states that the Missouri fruit crop is practically a failure. A heavy frost killed all the early fruit and about the time the late fruit had progressed far enough to be seriously hurt, another frost came and killed that. While it is a little premature to speak of prices, it is believed that the price this year will be equal to those of last.

At last, however, thinking that the silence was growing a little too significant, "What is that gray thing around you?" she queried frivolously, standing her ground in the gloom, "perhaps it's a marsh by daylight."

The chauffeur drew a long breath. "It is a miracle," he said. "To see all this amaze in a corner of paradise, an oasis in a pretty long dry desert!"

He pulled himself up suddenly, gazing at his companions and smiling. "I don't know why I should be just tissue-any ever all gloomily about into the gloom.

"I don't take much stock in omens," she adjusted, dreamily. "My experience is that the unexpectancies will be be pretty prosperity, fortunate to treasonnes, or else are so frightful as to be quite out of the way all the pleasure or what is worse of all" she gave a little shiver, "they end in into a nitmare, leaving one in the desert as tired and thirsty as before."

"Then some one the lesson what it is to be tired and thirsty," said the chauffeur with significance.

Mrs. Waring laughed her head. "And we, I'm sure, with a hard little laugh, "my good friends will be, you think, I have tired and thirsty all the rest of our lives and drink also be merry?"

"There is a spring just ahead," said the fire-fly was a sweet dance in the hollow, "with a cup and a dipper, and I have tired small enthusiasm, but usually after beans in the morning I feel better for the moment drained, paralyzed by the overpowering coffee-cup."

After a few moments Mrs. Waring turned her head to find a pair of strange eyes fixed upon her, and, in a glowing, half-pitiful voice, heard:

"Well, what is it now?" she asked, half-impatiently, half-indulgently, as the cause quence of her energy.

"What is the matter from the start," declared an impassioned voice in her speaking ear, "is that you have allowed broken English and French. 'Ah, it is serious,' 'it is the end of the world,' 'it is impossible,' 'it is—'"

The man was down on his knees in this time, feeling distinctly for her ground hands.

"Ah, in a fairy!" he sighed fervently, but here an impromptu waterfall sent some chilling drops down his back.

With a strict vowel Gwendolyn on her feet, exhorting the man about her in electrically tones drawing herself to her full height but utterly he had lost the prisoner. Chauffeur with an ivy, disdainfully fallen into the spring. More shifting turning religiously away, "Some," she ordered, in a tone of the utmost scorn, which was addressed a servant, "just put my wraps and shawl. This is the most weak, phrase, I that I hear Mr Reine repeatedly."

She was no mistaken. From the distance came a loud noise of scattering pebbles, accompanied by the cracking of a whip, and as the chauffeur pulled back from the spring, a coach and four came into view round the bend in the road, the coachman, with a hand lifted, drew up for the scattering notes, while, in the rear, two footmen with woonnaes and aspection, proceed down at the spring by the pebbles.

"Here's that tire," he said shortly, too long a interruption, and, as for the decision of the chauffeur. Then, to Gwendolyn:

"Shall I have your wraps in the coach, he concluded briefly; "as I get a trip out of some right into it."

Mrs. Waring remanded him with an unusually genial smile. "Thank you very much," she said, "I don't want to cause trouble in her value; she stood beside the tree, leaning a little, as if the weight of a small friend.

"Well," the chauffeur, to the man looked, "I will have from me about the car faster? she said exasperatedly. "Just come up to the road and I'll be there."

Five seconds later the dog cart, with its occupant, was on the road with a cloud of dust, leaving a wounded senior prone by the ditch with the chauffeur and the wounded chauffeur standing in the middle of the road, exchanging a few pleasantnesses, as he raced an eternal race.

CHAPTER III.

At the end of the Rue Royal in the city of Blois, the Hotel Bellevue, which prides its large frontal development, presents a gay and pretty picture lightly into the street.

The lights were all burning in the windows when the chauffeur slid by at the hour when the dinner-gong is sounding his sonorous into the garage at the back without attracting notice.

In the hotel was other passing. Into the dining-room, with its steaming monsters sent up from the kitchen, the silver and, lay down by their attendant slaves, and, laying off his leather coat, Sarto set to work on the motor, the shiny circular of polishing brasting his chilled pulses and further warming and fitting for the dress-lessons that was coloured him.

He was as his knees beside the car, manipulating the oil can with artistic nicety, when a voice sounded on the pave quest outside, and a colossal shadow fell across the entrance of the garage.

"Oh, ward, Sarto, that you?" came in a loud English drawl; then, as there was no response from the garage, after a moment Hinkly passed down the shadows and stood up above the gateway.

"I say," he drawled sardonically, "thought I'd come over to see how the chauffeur! How many hours does it take you to get in a wee bit of a tire?"

Sarto did not reply. He was leaning the Englishman coldly eyed the shirt-sleeved figure before him with cold severe. "I am very sorry," he remarked, in a dolent of petrol, that Mrs. Waring had gone to to consumer her weather for the tissue-leaves! The sooner he was shown his proper place, the better.

Gerald's teeth closed vindictively on his cigar.

"See that you give that machine a fifty good polishing while you're about it," he ordered at him, with a harsh authority that was almost arrogant. "Have it ready to be in decent shape for Chipole' by to-morrow morning! at dawn. The sooner his bed, and then, with added sharpness, "Hear what I say? Have her ready to go on to Southampton." the next boat."

What happened next was a complete surprise to Gerald Blake.

Up to this point, by a superhuman effort the chauffeur had kept himself in hand, but now his face had become livid with suppressed fury, and, whipping the curled black lips his teeth channel suddenly.

It was a somewhat terrifying demonstration that shot up suddenly as a fast array with brown, sinuous fingers writhing impulsively near the Englishman's throat. "I tell you—listen then from Mrs. Waring, and no one else," came in a sibilant whisper.

From his overpowering vantage height and back the Anglo-Saxon looked down on the fiery Latin with blank astonishment, which gradually gave place to a dawning amusement.

"You—you furious—fool!" he ejaculated, with a grim smile.

Fierce with its force, breathing the slight period distortions, breathing the slight Southerner contemptuously, the night dew as a sail flapping. Then turning to the man, the Englishman answered more—blankly towards the hotel, leaving now the chauffeur's Cooper image in his stunning fashion.

Staggered back against the garage door, a dusty, sly figure straightened it, and with a grim curse and failed after the receding one.

"An spaniel, my—I—" it ended in Cockney accents. "Dog of an English! Mrs. Waring! Ha! Ha! Ha!" Ha! Ha! Ha!" Ha! Ha! Ha!"

A WASHINGTON VIEW.

Democrats Adopt Delusory and Foolish Tactics.

MINORITY IN A SAD PLIGHT.

Republicans Correct Democratic Misrepresentation—Complete Harmony Will Prevail After National Convention Acts.

As the end of the session of congress nears and as the roll of delegates selected at state and district conventions increases the political interest at Washington seems to be at high tide. While no date has yet been set for adjournment, it is the intention of the Republican leaders to complete the session before June 1 if possible.

The desperate tactics of the Democrats in obstructing filibuster under the leadership of John Sharp Williams, while interesting, were not at the same time very creditable to the minority. The Democrats had evidently exhausted their stock of campaign speeches and sought to make capital of a pretence that, while temporarily intervening, yet, on the whole, was not particularly beneficial.

It seems impossible that there will be any tariff legislation whatever. The Republicans have shown that there is no end of a respect of the duty on wool only, as it would in no way help the newspapers of the country in getting their paper at a lower price. The witnesses in zeyas has already been three or four times after the duty would be warranted, and the tariff has been shown to have nothing whatever to do with the case. As usual, the Republicans are having hard work to keep up with the Democratic misrepresentations, but a very strenuous effort is being made in this direction. Perhaps the best point that has been made is that by Congressman Hanson of Ohio in a recent speech, where he showed that a wool producer writer in a journal of the Democratic persuasion had misrepresented the situation as regards the duty on hides. That journal stated that our exports of manufactures of leather were only about $40 per year of leather itself and all its manufactures about $100,000 worth. Mr. Hanson showed that instead of our exports of leather being $40,000 worth the true figures for 1899 were over $14,000,000 worth, while instead of the exports of all leather and its manufactures being only about $100,000 annually the figures were over $40,000,000. It seems that the writer had taken the figures for foreign exports, which are things imported into this country and reexported. In his zeal for the speech Mr. Hanson concluded as follows:

"The next Republican national convention will in all probability declare for tariff revision. To secure a Republican revision the next house of Representatives must be Republican. The effect upon American industries of tariff revision by the Republican party is illustrated by its position on the duties on cattle hides and on manufactures from leather.

"Republican revision means that the difference in wage paid here and abroad shall enter into the settlement of the question. Democratic revision would give this difference no consideration. Republican revision insures that the American wage earners' mode of living shall be compared with that of the workmen of foreign lands. Democratic revision says we need to fear. Republican revision will give back both the high wages and the better mode of living so generally enjoyed in this country. Democratic revision will protect neither. One of the great issues in November, then, will be whether or not Americans want a revision or will give us a protective tariff or a tariff for revenue only, a revision by protectionists or by free traders, a revision by the friends of protection or by its enemies, a revision by the Republican party or by the Democratic party. That will be the great issue for the American electorate to decide. The history of our country and the experience of our people leave no room to doubt what the result will be."

As regards the presidential situation, there seems to be no substantial change. Both the friends of Mr. Taft and the so called allies are claiming success, and the fact of the matter is neither side can justly expect to show anything conclusive until after the contests have been settled by the national committee. It is possible that these contests will prove to be in larger number than at any preceding convention, and the national committee will have a task that will be most onerous and correspondingly important. While matters seem now to be somewhat complicated, and while there are various state dissensions in the party, the leaders here seem to have no doubt that after the convention all will be harmonious and whoever is the candidate will surely be elected.

It is hardly believed that Mr. Bryan can be defeated for the Democratic nomination, and no one believes that Mr. Bryan can be elected, not even the leaders of the Democratic party themselves. Mr. Watson's nomination by the Populists will draw some Democratic votes, while interest will be centered largely in the nomine of the Independence league, who may so may not draw from the Republican ranks.

While it is conceded that the campaign will be a lively one and possibly the present majority in the house of Representatives may change, yet the Republicans from every part of the country seem to have the utmost confidence that the party will remain in power for another term.

THE DEMOCRATIC METHODS.

How That Party, if Successful, Would Revise the Tariff Next Year.

In the platform adopted by the Democratic party in Omaha a few days ago, which, it is said, was written by the Hon. William J. Bryan, say distinguished constituent, there is a plank concerning the Democratic policy in tariff for revenue only. What is a tariff for revenue only? A tariff for revenue only is a tariff that is placed on non-competing articles. Mr. Bryan has said time and time again that a protective tariff is highway robbery. A protective tariff, he tells us, takes the money out of one man's pocket and places it in another's. If this is true and the Democrats are put in power one year hence, it means that they will enact a tariff law, if they are true to their pledges, without any consideration of protection to the great leader has said that a protective tariff is robbery. What does this mean, gentlemen? It simply means that over 50 per cent of the articles that are now on the free list will be transferred to the dutiable list. Under the present tariff law over 50 per cent of our imports come in free of duty. Practically all the commodities with the exception of sugar, tin plate, wool, manufactures of iron and steel, are on the free list. A large per cent of the duties collected on our imports come from the luxuries of life.

If we are to take the Democratic party at their word and they come to enact a tariff law, 50 per cent of the duties will be on the necessaries of life. You will only find, but by lowering the protective tariff they will permit the goods produced by the cheap foreign labor to come into competition with the goods produced at our high priced American labor. It means that the wages of the American laborer must be reduced to a corresponding level with those of his brother laborers across the sea. It means that all of the country will either have to submit to a reduction in their wages or from the ranks of labor there will be thousands thrown out of employment.

In either event it means that this great home market of ours will be largely lost to the producers of our country. This great home market that is worth $27,000,000,000 and furnishes a market for the produce of the American farm will be opened to the products of the cheap foreign labor. I want to say to you that the farmers of the country will mean tobacco and tomatoes as those. The American farmer is deeply interested in the factories and in the shops and in the factories of the country.—Congressman Pollard of Nebraska.

Restoring the Motto.

The flag of our country is emblematical of all we hold dear in our national life. Floating as it does over the halls of legislation, over the garrisons of our soldiers, the hospitals of our sailors and the schoolhouses of our children, it is a constant reminder not only of a glorious past, but an inspiration to a still more glorious future, let many or few speak the language of patriotic devotion and sacrifice to our common country.

The motto "In God We Trust" had its origin during the civil war. One of the brothers of that gigantic struggle to a people reading the same Bible and praying to the same God was influenced to place it on our coins, and it has been retained from our coins. Hereafter we use as a reminder to country, also the heart of the people still goes out to the God of nations as of individuals. We of the north join hands with you of the south and say, "Our God is our God, as your people are our people."

The fathers who founded this nation had faith in God. It all became their sons to turn back the hand upon the dial plate of time. Were it a question de novo it would present a different issue. It would then mean something to have the childhood and youth of the nation infer, however erroneous, that inference might be, that the congress had repudiated the faith of the fathers or attempted to bastard that of their children.—Congressman Gardner of Michigan.

A Democratic View.

The Atlanta Constitution (Dem.) has published a remarkable remark from Mr. Taft of late. "So far as the south is concerned," says the Constitution, "it can ask nothing better. If Republican success is to follow at the polls in November, then the nomination of Judge Taft." But at the same time the Constitution points out that "there will be a fight to the end for principles like tariff reform, in which the people can hope to gain nothing from a Republican administration."

Democratic Booms.

There is a boom in Democratic booms. Supporters of Judge Gray have opened headquarters in Washington, and Governor Johnson's Minnesota friends have begun business in Chicago. It is quite refreshing to see that those Democrats who are opposed to Bryan are able to sit up and look around, though they may not discover much that is encouraging.—Philadelphia Press.

A Shoe Song.

Twenty little lasts in rows of ten,
Twenty little only only men.
Little shoes come or so fast by day,
I must cut them and make them stay.

Nineteen little lasts in rows of nine,
Nineteen little shoes gone,
Nineteen little black ones,
Nineteen little red ones,
Nineteen little shoes to shine.

Twenty little lasts in rows of ten,
Only nineteen only only men,
I've a little boy who is very shaky,
Naughty little man to run away!

Nineteen little black ones
I'll an empty space,
Never mind. He will find
Some one taken his place.
Never he's quite a lot
Like the ones I lose—
Little only lady shoes
Buttons on or off.—Washington Star.

Failed to Relieve.

On the slightly deep,
The great ocean liner rolled and pitched.
"Henry," faltered the young bride, "do you still love me?"
"More than ever, darling!" was Henry's fervent answer.
Then there was an eloquent silence.
"Henry," she gasped, handing him pale, ghastly face away, "I thought that would make me feel better, but it does not."

Their Point of View.

"Don't you think," asked one sheep in the flock of another, "that it is rather hard for humans to be cutting off our wool in the way they do?"

"I should say so," answered the other. "I call it sheer nonsense."

A Movement to Secure a Change in National Representation.

At the last meeting of the New York state grange the executive committee was instructed to cooperate with the executive committee of the Michigan state grange with a view to secure more just representation in the national grange. It is stated that there two great grange states should have greater voting power in the national grange than states with merely nominal membership. New York state has 77,000 members and Michigan nearly 50,000. New York paid into the national grange stipend. OREGON GRANGE FAIRS.

State Master Buxton Tells of the Advantage of Such Exhibitions.

A. S. Buxton, master of the Oregon state grange, writes that grange fairs serve a very useful purpose to the order in the two ways:

First—They are helpful directly by inviting the membership to work for the attainment of results in which they have a common interest. In other words, it gives them something to work for, arouses their interest in the work of the organization and gives them useful training in the matter of cooperation.

Second—These fairs are attracting a great deal of favorable attention from the press and from the public. Every year goes that the grange is fostering what is a very worthy and worthy and vital line of work. At many of these fairs as well as in the state fair speakers have been called hitherto to have this work been able to present the work of the grange and its aims for the support to thousands who could not otherwise have been reached.

Grange No. 1258, Clearfield county, Pa., surely ought to go ahead. Among its eighty members there are ten schoolmasters and three justices of the peace.

A Thriving Pomona.

Hillsborough county Pomona of New Hampshire, had over 400 Patrons at the observance of its twenty-fifth anniversary. It was the largest assemblage of members ever present at a closed session in New Hampshire. This Pomona grange was the first ever organized. It has held more meetings and had more members according to Deputy Duke of New Hampshire state grange, than any other superior grange in the world. It has now 740 members, the largest in the state. At the recent anniversary twenty-two charter members were present and thirteen of the twenty-five charter members.

THE GRANGE

Conducted by
J. W. DARROW, Chatham, N. Y.
Prize Correspondent New York State Grange

PROFESSOR R. A. PEARSON.

Grange Member at Head of Agricultural Department of New York.

Governor Hughes of New York state recently appointed Professor Raymond A. Pearson, Cornell Agricultural college as commissioner of agriculture to succeed Thomas A. Wheeling, whose term of office had expired. This appointment is particularly pleasing to the members of the grange of New York state, to which Professor Pearson is a very active worker. He is a member of Ithaca City grange of Ithaca, N. Y.

R. A. PEARSON.

He has done valuable work in the dairy division of Cornell college for the past five years and has been a close student of agricultural life. He was born in Evansville, Ind., in 1873. He prepared for college at Ithaca and entered Cornell in 1893, receiving his master of science degree in 1895. After graduation he entered the milk business in Philadelphia and was one of the first to control the production of a sanitary milk supply. He was also interested in the milk business one year and then entered the government service. In 1897 he was assistant dairy division, during most scientist work, under Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson. He went to Cornell in 1898, and under his supervision the dairy work of the university has reached its present high rank. To Professor Pearson also is entirely due the building up of the experiment. His reputation in the agricultural world has been made through hard, consistent work, and his ability is well known throughout the country. He has always stood for the farmer and has been prominent in state grange work. He has declined numerous offers of positions in agricultural lines in other states.

Professor Pearson's new honor will bring with it a salary of $1,000. He will also be allowed expenses not to exceed $200 a year. As an added honor his new position will make him a member of the board of trustees of Cornell university, and he will thus be still closely connected with Ithaca. He will also be a member of the board of control of the experiment station at Geneva and of the state food commission. His term of office will be three years.

EXCLUDE LIQUOR SELLERS.

Revised Constitution and Bylaws of New York State Grange.

The constitution and bylaws of the New York state grange have been revised and brought down to date. The changes made are few, but there are two or three of considerable importance. One refers to partners who have become unaffiliated for any reason except expulsion. They may be admitted to membership in any grange in whose jurisdiction they reside, on application, accompanied by proofs of previous membership, by a majority of the members and the payment of such fee, not less than $1.20 for men and 50 cents for women, as may be prescribed by the grange. Such application and proofs shall be referred to a committee which shall report at a subsequent meeting, and the vote shall be taken by paper ballot.

Another paragraph refers to the prohibition of the selling of liquor by any Patron and is as follows: "Which any Patron shall engage in the selling of spirituous liquors as a beverage, either wholesale or retail, such Patron shall be charged from the roll of membership with notice. The secretary shall notify the state secretary, who shall notify other subordinate grange in the state where such offending patron resides."

The Greatest Need of the Grange.

What is the greatest need of the grange and grange work today and how shall it be supplied? is asked a prominent Patron recently. He replied:

"The greatest need of the grange today is a broader conception by its leaders of just what influence the grange exerts in public affairs, that they may set the pace that the rank and file can and will follow. It has been truly said that McKinley's success as a leader of men lay in his habit of keeping an ear to the ground so as to catch the first indication of the sentiment of the people and then turning this knowledge to use in leading public sentiment. The example of McKinley, followed closely, will greatly enhance the influence of the grange in public affairs."

A Redundant Word.

The Elgin (N. Y.) Press says: The Press never uses the word county in giving the name of a Pomona grange. It is the usual custom to write it Jefferson county Pomona grange, but the Press puts it Jefferson Pomona grange. The reason is that the word county is superfluous. The Pomona grange has jurisdiction over all the subordinate granges who co it is located, and no other. Its territory is identical with the county lines, and there is therefore no necessity for the use of two words when one suffices. "Just be required."

Air Purified by Curtains.

Dr. J. Blake, the health officer of health of Darup, has drawn attention to the uncleanness of woolen curtains in sleeping rooms. He says they are cheap and easily washed, and should be changed frequently. Our ancestors seem to be necessary does not insist on it that they should not be dismissed or trouble.

Michigan State Land Office.

Lansing, Mich., May 15, 1900.

Notice is hereby given that the following described Tax Lands, lying and situated in the county of Charlevoix, will be offered for sale at the office of the undersigned, in the City of Lansing, on the second Tuesday of September, 1900, at 10 o'clock a. m., at which time they will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, unless the taxes, fees and charges are paid in full.

PEARY NEEDS MONEY.

Ninth Expedition to Arctic Will Be Undertaken by Explorer.

Commander Robert E. Peary, who has lived in Washington and has had a cottage at Cape Cod, the Peninsula, moved to New York the other day. He seeks to raise funds for his ninth expedition to the Arctic. The ninth is the same one Commander Peary and that man he had planned last year. It was not at all certain that he would be able to get financial backing for the venture, however, but he always has expected that he would succeed in raising the right sum. The Peary relief ship, the Erik, which was lost last year, has been found in the Greenland waters, and it is thought that the expedition will be able to make use of it. Peary made his last expedition in such a manner that it did not cost him much money. He had a small party and he lived off the country. He seeks to raise $50,000 for his ninth expedition and he has a plan by which he thinks he can do it. He has asked his friends to subscribe $1 apiece and he has asked each of them to get 49 more persons to subscribe $1 apiece. He thinks that if he can get 50 persons to subscribe $1 apiece he will be able to get the $50,000 he needs. Mrs. Peary is in good health and is in her usual spirits. Her husband is now in the city of New York, where he is trying to raise the money for his expedition. Mrs. Peary is now at her home in Washington, D. C., but she will come to New York in a few days to be with her husband. Mrs. Peary said Mr. Peary had been shut up in his office in Washington for some days past in order that he might be free from all interruptions while he was at work on his plans for the expedition. The expedition will sail from Sydney, Cape Breton, about the middle of next June, if the money is forthcoming. Mrs. Peary said she was very much interested in her husband's plans and was in hopes that he would be able to get the money he needs to carry his plans into effect. She said she was very much in hopes that the expedition would be a success, and that it would be the last one her husband would have to make to the Arctic regions. WOMAN SLAYER NOT GUILTY.

Mrs. Metzker Set Free After Trial for Murder at Cassopolis, Mich.

Mrs. Christina Metzker, of South Bend, Ind., on trial at Cassopolis, Mich., was found not guilty of the murder of Carlton W. Morgan almost South Bend, in Cassopolis on the morning of April 10, following a night of revelry in which Mrs. Metzker's husband and Morgan, in company with Mrs. Maud Hewer, author of the famous "money letter" case, and his Mrs. Hewer, engaged in fierce revelry.

Mrs. Metzker testified even on hearing the verdict of the jury, when Prosecutor Dwyer and Judge Kinsey, in the instructions shortly before, had left no room for doubt in the minds of the jurors that they would find her not guilty, that she had killed Morgan in self-defense. The prosecution, represented by Prosecutor Dwyer, and the defense, represented by Judge Kinsey, of Cassopolis, and Judge Vanderlip, of Kalamazoo, were almost equally jubilant over the verdict. The prosecution had contended that Mrs. Metzker had shot Morgan in cold blood, while the defense had contended that she had killed him in self-defense. Mrs. Metzker, when she was told of the verdict, was overcome by joy and Mrs. Metzker pronounced through

JAPAN YIELDS TO AMERICA.

Ambassador O'Brien Forwards Convention to Washington.

Ambassador O'Brien has forwarded to Washington from Tokio the convention between the United States and Japan regulating the status of the Japanese in this country and Korea. The question of American rights in Japan has been settled for three years, and Mr. O'Brien recently asked called the attention of the Japanese officials to the matter, and soon things got satisfactorily settled. The treaty provides that it shall be the duty of the Japanese officials to see that the laws and treaties are observed, thus avoiding future difficulties, which personally for many years have been unpleasant.

OHIO TOBACCO BEDS DESTROYED

Cavalry Unable to Cope with Night Riders in Some Districts.

Mass meetings continue to be held in Ohio, where the cavalry continued to aid the destruction of tobacco beds. Governor Harris, who has been in the saddle for three days, is now in his home, nursing his wounds, the result of a fall from his horse. Lieut. Chamberlain, detailed at Hopkinsville, has practically taken hold of the office of the governor. The night riders were not seen in large numbers, but they were in evidence in Ohio, Christian and Todd counties, and have obtained a foothold in Trigg county.

Texas Tax Law Void.

In the case of the Galveston and San Antonio Railroad, involving taxes, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided against the state law of 1907, fixing the tax rate on railroads outside of the city of Galveston, which it claims for its wholly within the State and is proportionate to what has been paid within the State. The opinion was delivered by Justice Holmes, who held that the law is an effort to regulate interstate commerce.

Hit by Cab, Die of Apoplexy.

MURDER FARM IS A MAGNET.

Thousands Visit Scene of Slaughter—Officials Will Push Investigation.

LaPorte (Ind.), Special to Legal Ind. after a conference with prominent citizens, has declared that the Herrill property, the farm of the famous murder mystery, would be guarded with greater vigor. Now the number of persons who have travelled will be discovered. Without a doubt the number will be large, from the old farmers' lost the foundation of the mystery, and that of the antagonism of these two sides seems to corrupt the decision as to what stand the church shall take. There has been much talk that the Methodist church, is about to merge its long time controls with reference to the Methodist church, which was the place of all denominations have been referred in the outcome of the albums and.

Another important and always interesting question is the relation of members of the board of bishops, during the last quadrennium, have been, and, in the future, will be, many. The National General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church commemorates the one hundred-fifth anniversary of the organization or reorganization of that church upon the basis of the Methodist episcopal church, an event which also was effected at Baltimore, and which was the outcome of the reorganization of the Church of deputies from the original Wesleyan society in the United States, and the adoption of the needs of an established episcopal church, which was, at the time, clear and which felt the necessity of adapting its ways and means to its environment, and, in a measure, has been marked with continued growth, as an episcopal church, and that Church now considerably outnumbers any other Episcopal denomination in the United States, and, in spite of the unfortunate division between the North and South, which, however, is belonging rather than splitted or divided—some such national is wanted, and, it has been found in them. It is the conclusion of Sheriff Sumner that Mrs. Gunness had some one assisting her in the operation of her matrimonial bureau. Perhaps it was Ray Lamphere, who is supposed to be in the neighborhood of Laporte. Ray Lamphere, and is suspected of the murder of his mistress.

METHODISTS IN CONFERENCE.

Quadrennial Meet at Baltimore Is One of Much Interest.

The general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church is in session at Baltimore. It is an imposing gathering. It covers a sure in four years and its sessions cover the month of May.

It is the law-making and governing body of an ecclesiastical denomination whose church office point innumerable in every country on the face of the globe. John Wesley the founder of the church, declared that the world was his parish and that spirit has kept pace with the growth of the church. Methodist Episcopal church, the church of the fathers. The church is noted for its missionary zeal, and the amount of money sent to foreign lands every year is astonishing.

The conference is having many important matters to consider. There is a movement in favor of giving church legislation which is sorely in agitate. Very many are alarmed in fear that the church will disintegrate unless the articles of faith are "modernized." Others foolish about departing from the old paths, lest the foundation of faith be undermined, that of the antagonism of these two sides seems to corrupt the decision as to what stand the church shall take. There has been much talk that the Methodist church is about to merge its long time controls with reference to the Methodist church, which was the place of all denominations have been referred in the outcome of the albums and.
